

School of Theology at Claremont

1001 1320004

THE VIRGIN BIRTH OF JESUS

THE VIRGIN BIRTH OF JESUS

BY THE SAME AUTHOR

THE BOOK OF ISAIAH. Newly Translated with Introductions, Critical Notes and Explanations by G. H. Box, M.A. Together with a Prefatory Note by S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Late Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford, and Canon of Christ Church. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with two maps. 7s. 6d. net.

THE EZRA-APOCALYPSE. Being Chapters 3-14 of the Book commonly known as IV. Ezra (or II. Esdras). Translated from a critically revised text, with critical Introductions, Notes and Explanations; with a General Introduction to the Apocalypse, and an Appendix containing the Latin text. By G. H. Box, M.A. Together with a Prefatory Note by W. SANDAY, D.D., LL.D., Litt.D., Lady Margaret Professor and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 488 pp. 10s. 6d. net.

THE RELIGION AND WORSHIP OF THE SYNAGOGUE. An Introduction to the Study of Judaism from the New Testament Period. By W. O. E. OESTERLEY, D.D., and G. H. Box, M.A. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with eight illustrations. Second, Revised, and Cheaper Edition. 7s. 6d. net.

For complete list of Pitman's Theological Works, see end of book.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH OF JESUS

A CRITICAL EXAMINATION OF THE GOSPEL-NARRATIVES OF THE NATIVITY, AND OTHER
NEW TESTAMENT AND EARLY CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE, AND THE ALLEGED IN-FLUENCE OF HEATHEN IDEAS

BT
317
B6
BY George Herbert
G. H. BOX, M.A., 1869-1933.

LECTURER IN RABBINICAL HEBREW, KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON ;
HON. CANON OF ST. ALBANS

WITH A FOREWORD BY THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON

LONDON
SIR ISAAC PITMAN & SONS, LTD., 1 AMEN CORNER, E.C.
AND AT BATH, NEW YORK AND MELBOURNE
1916

PRINTED BY SIR ISAAC PITMAN & SONS, LTD., LONDON, BATH, NEW YORK AND MELBOURNE . 1916

University of Southern California Library

57M
Pel 232.92 B788v

CAROLO. IACOBO. BALL
OLIM. MAGISTRO. INDULGENTI
CARISSIMO. PER. MULTOS. ANNOS. AMICO
HUNC. MEUM. LIBELLUM
PIETATIS. AC. REVERENTIAE. DOCUMENTUM
DEDICO

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2024

FOREWORD

THIS is a very clear and scholarly book which will, I think, carry conviction to the unprejudiced mind.

The question of the Virgin Birth of Our Lord is a vital one in many ways.

1. In the first place, for the Church of England to lay it aside would make impossible any reunion with the Roman or Greek branches of the Church, to both of which it is a fundamental doctrine, and rightly so, for as the writer of this book shews, it has been embedded in the belief of Christendom from the beginning, and, if anything is "Catholic," it is the doctrine of the Virgin Birth.

2. But, if it is untrue, it must be given up, whatever the consequences. We must follow Truth wherever it leads, and it is here the writer of this book, by his clear argument, will help the honest seeker after Truth.

He proves to demonstration that the story arose in the Judæo-Christian atmosphere, an atmosphere entirely inconsistent with the suggestion that the story was a repetition of a heathen myth; he once again deals with the argument brought against the story from the "silence" of St. Mark, St. John, and St. Paul; he shews how mutually destructive are the theories of those who try to explain how the story arose from mythical or legendary antecedents, and, in a concluding section, draws out the doctrinal significance of the great belief.

FOREWORD

3. I will not attempt to condense an argument closely condensed already, but will only lay emphasis on the last point. Thoughtless people say, "What does it matter whether Christ was born of a Virgin or not?"

But it DOES matter to one who believes in the Incarnation, and who believes that the Christian life was meant to be "a new creation."

To those who believe that Jesus was only a good man, however great and glorious, the Virgin Birth will always be an obstacle to be removed; but to those who believe that the Son of God came down from Heaven to earth, that His great gift was "a new life"—begun in Baptism, strengthened in Confirmation, fed upon in the Holy Communion—the Virgin Birth will be, of course, a mystery, but one CONGRUOUS with that belief, and one which sheds Divine light upon it for ever.

A. F. LONDON:

LONDON HOUSE,

November, 1915.

PREFACE

THE present volume has grown out of an Essay read before the Society of Historical Theology at Oxford, 26th Nov., 1903, which was afterwards published in the Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft for 1905 (pp. 80-101), under the title "The Gospel Narratives of the Nativity and the alleged influence of heathen ideas."¹ In this essay the main lines of the argument which has been more fully worked out in the present volume were laid down; the Jewish character of the canonical Nativity-Narratives was emphasized and illustrated, and in particular the midrashic character of the first two chapters of the First Gospel; and the impossibility involved in the hypothesis of direct heathen origin was pointed out. The method of treatment adopted in the following pages will, it is hoped, speak for itself.

The author desires, in the first place, to thank most warmly his colleague, Prof. H. J. White, of King's College, for the help he has rendered, especially in textual matters. Prof. White has generously placed the valuable textual material embodied in the appended notes (printed at the end of the volume) at the author's disposal. Attention may, perhaps, be directed to the first of these¹ where a somewhat novel reading of the textual evidence is propounded. The author also acknowledges with gratitude the permission kindly given by the Rev. Dr. Hastings to quote from the articles Virgin Birth, Star, and Nazarene, contributed by the author to the second volume of the Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels. In all cases, however, the reader is referred for full discussion of the relevant points in the articles themselves.

¹ Also published in a shortened form under the same title in The Interpreter for Jan., 1906 (pp. 195-207).

PREFACE

During recent years there has been no lack of literature dealing with the Virgin Birth, and it cannot be denied that a feeling of uneasiness, not to say bewilderment, has grown up in the minds of many Christian people on the question of the historical value and truth of the Gospel-Narratives. In some quarters the very idea of taking seriously, for instance, the Gospel account of Our Lord's birth at Bethlehem is dismissed as absurd. It is assumed as axiomatic that Jesus was born at Nazareth. In the face, however, of the fact that such scholars as Spitta and W. Weber have published, within recent years, elaborate critical essays to shew that Jesus was actually born at Bethlehem, the attitude of contemptuous denial adopted in these circles becomes a little foolish.

An attempt has been made in the present volume to state fairly and adequately the critical objections to the historicity of the Gospel-Narratives, and at the same time to test the Narratives in the light of such criticism.

¹ pp. 215 ff.

PREFACE

Criticism has its rights, and these, it is needless to add, ought to be respected. But criticism needs to be controlled by the sympathy which is indispensable to true insight. Such criticism will always be welcomed by those who believe that critical knowledge and whole-hearted faith, far from being irreconcilable, can and ought to be the truest of allies.

It is the author's firm conviction that the essential truthfulness of the Gospel-Narratives only shines forth with added lustre as they emerge from the fiery ordeal to which they have been subjected.

G. H. BOX.

KING'S COLLEGE,
LONDON.

Epiphany, 1916.

SELECTED LITERATURE

(Containing the names of the Principal Works referred to with the short titles.)

I.—MONOGRAPHS

- RAMSAY . . . Was Christ born at Bethlehem? (London, 1898).
- LOBSTEIN . . . Virgin Birth of Christ = The Virgin Birth of Christ, an historical and critical essay by Paul Lobstein : London, 1903 (pp. 138).
- SOLTAU . . . Birth of Jesus Christ = The Birth of Jesus Christ : by Wilhelm Soltau ; translated from the German by Maurice A. Canney, M.A. : London, 1903 (pp. 83).
- KNOWLING . . . Our Lord's Virgin Birth = Our Lord's Virgin Birth and the Criticism of To-day : by R. J. Knowling, D.D. : London, 1903. (pp. 95). S.P.C.K.
- HOBEN . . . (Allan, Ph.D.). The Virgin Birth : University of Chicago Press, 1903.
- SWEET . . . Birth and Infancy of Jesus Christ = The Birth and Infancy of Jesus Christ according to the Gospel Narratives : by Rev. Louis Matthews Sweet, M.A. Philadelphia, 1906 (pp. xii. and 365).
- ORR Virgin Birth = The Virgin Birth of Christ : by James Orr, M.A., D.D. : with Appendix giving opinions of living scholars : London, 1907 (pp. xiv. and 301).
- GRÜTZMACHER (Richard H., Prof. of Theol. University of Rostock) : The Virgin Birth : New York, 1907 (pp. 80).
- THORBURN . . . Evidences of Virgin Birth = A critical examination of the Evidences for the Doctrine of the Virgin Birth : by Thomas James Thorburn, M.A., LL.D. : London, 1908 (pp. iv. and 179). S.P.C.K.

SELECTED LITERATURE

- USENER . . . Weihnachtsfest = Das Weihnachtsfest : Von Hermann Usener : Second edition, Bonn, 1911 (pp. xx. and 390).
- S. KRAUSS . . Das Leben Jesu nach Jüdischen. Quellen : Berlin, 1902 (pp. 309).

II.—DISCUSSIONS, ESSAYS, ARTICLES

(which refer to the question)

- GUNKEL . . . Zum religionsgesch. Verständniss d.N.T. = Zum religionsgeschichtlichen Verständniss des Nuen Testaments : von Hermann Gunkel : Göttingen, 1903 (pp. vii. and 96).
- J. HALÉVY . . Études Évangéliques : premier fascicule : Paris, 1903 (pp. 238).
- BRIGGS . . . Messiah of the Gospels = The Messiah of The Gospels : by C. A. Briggs, D.D. : Edinburgh, 1894 (pp. xv. and 337).
- BRIGGS . . . New Light = New Light on the Life of Jesus : by C. A. Briggs, D.D. : Edinburgh, 1904 (pp. xii. and 196).
- CHEYNE . . . Bible Problems = Bible Problems and the New Material for their Solution : by T. K. Cheyne, D.Litt., D.D. : London, 1904 (pp. 271).
- THOMPSON . . Miracles = Miracles in the New Testament : by the Rev. J. M. Thompson : London, 1911 (pp. xv. and 236).
- EDERSHEIM . . L J M = The Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah : by A. Edersheim. 2 Vols.
- GORE . . . Dissertations = Dissertations on Subjects connected with the Incarnation, by Charles Gore, M.A. : London, 1895 (Dissertation I.—The Virgin Birth of Our Lord).
- HEADLAM . . Miracles = The Miracles of the New Testament : by Arthur C. Headlam, D.D. : London, 1914 (pp. xvi. and 361).
- GRESSMANN . . (Dr. Hugo) : Das Weihnachts-Evangelium : Göttingen, 1914 (pp. 46).
- ZAHN . . . (Dr. Theodor) : Das Evangelium des Matthäus : Leipzig, 1903 (pp. viii. and 714).

SELECTED LITERATURE

- ALLEN . . . St. Matthew = A critical and exegetical Commentary on the Gospel according to St. Matthew : by Willoughby C. Allen, M.A. (I.C.C.) : Edinburgh, 1907 (pp. xcvi. and 338).
- ARTICLES on "The Birth of Christ in the New Testament" : by Willoughby C. Allen, M.A., in The Interpreter, Feb. and Oct., 1905.
- ARTICLE . . . Mary, in EB, by P. W. Schmiedel.
- „ . . . Nativity, in EB, by H. Usener.
- „ . . . Nazareth, in EB, by T. K. Cheyne.
- „ . . . Birth of Christ, in DCG, by R. J. Knowling.
- „ . . . Virgin Birth, in DCG, by G. H. Box.
- „ . . . Nazarene in DCG, by G. H. Box.
- „ . . . The Virgin Birth of Our Lord, by Dr. C. A. Briggs in The American Journal of Theology. April, 1908.

III.—OTHER WORKS

- DALMAN . . . Words = The Words of Jesus . . . by Gustav Dalman (English translation by D. M. Kay) : Vol. I. Edinburgh, 1902.
- SINGER . . . The Authorized Daily Prayer Book of the United Hebrew Congregations of the British Empire : edited by the Rev. S. Singer (Hebrew and English translation) : Published by Eyre & Spottiswoode, London.
- SCHÜRER . . . GVI = Geschichte des jüdischen. Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi : von Emil Schürer : Last edition, 3 Vols. (1901-9). (English Translation : A History of the Jewish People in the time of Christ : 5 Vols., 1890-1).
- RWS² . . . The Religion and Worship of the Synagogue : Second edition, by W. O. E. Oesterley and G. H. Box : 1911 (pp. xviii. and 474).

CONTENTS

CHAP.	PAGE
FOREWORD ;	vii
PREFACE	ix
I. INTRODUCTORY.	1
II. THE NARRATIVE OF ST. MATTHEW	7
ADDITIONAL NOTES—
(1) The Star of the Magi and The Star of the Messiah.
(2) He shall be called a Nazarene.
III. THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE (I)	34
IV. THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE (II)	51
V. THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE (III)	88
ADDITIONAL NOTES—
(3) Spitta on the Chronological Notices and Hymns in Luke i.-ii.
(4) On the Chronology.
VI. THE BIRTH AND CHILDHOOD OF JESUS IN THE APOCRYPHAL GOSPELS	121
VII. THE EVIDENCE OF THE OTHER NEW TESTA MENT WRITINGS AND THE EARLIEST CHRISTIAN TRADITION (OUTSIDE THE GOSPELS) RESPECTING THE BIRTH OF JESUS	135
VIII. THE ALLEGED PARALLELS FROM HEATHEN SOURCES	154
IX. CONCLUSION—
(1) The Historic Fact	173
(2) Doctrine and Fact	187
APPENDIX I. JESUS IN JEWISH LEGEND	199
APPENDIX II. ANCIENT JEWISH BETROTHAL AND MARRIAGE	209
APPENDED NOTES	215
INDEX	241

ABBREVIATIONS

- A J T* . = The American Journal of Theology.
- D B* . . = Dictionary of the Bible.
- D C G* . = The Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels :
Ed. by Hastings (2 Vols.).
- E B* . . = Encyclopaedia Biblica (4 Vols.).
- I C C* . = International Critical Commentary : by various Editors (pubd. by T. & T. Clark).
- C Q R* . = Church Quarterly Review.
- J Q R* . = Jewish Quarterly Review.
- J E* . . = The Jewish Encyclopaedia (12 Vols.).
- J T S* . = The Journal of Theological Studies.
- Exp T* . = Expository Times.
- Z N T W* = Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissen- schaft und die Kunde des Urchristentums.
(Giessen, Töpelmann.)

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTORY

HAVE the Gospel narratives of the Nativity, in their canonical form, been influenced by pagan conceptions? No apology is needed for asking once more and endeavouring to answer this question in view of the critical controversy that has within recent years invaded not only our scholastic, but also popular theological literature. The questions in debate have, of course, long ceased to be of merely academic interest, and involve issues of grave practical importance to Christians generally. With the theological question involved, however, it is not the purpose of the present volume to deal at any length. The writer's primary aim is to discuss, in as objective a manner as he can, the alleged influence of pagan ideas on the Nativity-Narratives of the First and Third Gospels, and the questions that arise therefrom.

According to the latest exponents of one branch of the critical school there is not the faintest shadow of doubt as to what the true answer to our question is. What the Christian Church has always regarded as the central fact of the narratives in question—the Virgin Birth—is without hesitation assigned in these quarters to a purely pagan origin. Thus, according to Usener, "for the whole birth and childhood story of Mt. (Matthew) in its every detail it is possible to trace a pagan sub-stratum. It must have arisen in Gentile-Christian circles, probably in those of the province of Asia, and then was to some extent legitimated by its narrator in accordance with the tendency manifested throughout the whole of the First Gospel by citation of prophetic 'words' in its support."¹ With this conclusion, also, Schmiedel agrees. According to him, "the origin of the idea of a virgin birth is to be sought in Gentile-Christian circles."²

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Soltau's estimate, though more guarded, is also in substantial agreement with the foregoing: "May we not suppose," he says, "that the Virgin Birth of Jesus had a similar (heathen) origin (to that of the episodes of the angels' Song of Praise, Luke ii. 8 f, and of the magi)?"³

In view of the pronouncedly Jewish-Christian character of the Nativity-Narratives of the Gospels such conclusions at first sight certainly seem to savour of paradox. How can such an essentially pagan idea have found entrance into Jewish-Christian circles? In order to elucidate this question, it will be necessary to discuss the character of the narratives afresh. If their Palestinian or semi-Palestinian origin can be sustained, the hypothesis of direct pagan influence must be ruled out,

¹ Art. Nativity, E.B., col. 3352.

² Art. Mary, op. cit., col. 2964.

³ The Birth of Jesus Christ, p. 41.

INTRODUCTORY

as Soltau,¹ indeed, admits. For the purposes of this discussion, it will be convenient to deal with the narrative of the First Gospel first, since it is here, according to Usener, that pagan influence is pronounced throughout. Moreover, it will readily be conceded that Mt.'s² account, whatever be its origin, is almost (if not wholly) independent of that of Luke.³

A cursory examination of the Gospel-narratives is sufficient to reveal certain apparent inconsistencies of statement and implication regarding the parentage of Jesus. He is popularly regarded and spoken of as the son of Joseph (cf. Matthew xiii. 55, "Is not this the carpenter's son?" ; Luke iv. 23 ; John i. 45, vi. 42 ; and even in the Nativity-Narrative of the Third Gospel, Mary and Joseph are several times referred to as "his parents" (Luke ii. 27, 41, 43),⁴ while once the mother of Jesus herself is made to say : "Thy father (i.e., Joseph) and I sought thee

¹ Op. cit., p. 34 note.

² In the following pages, Mt. (Matthew) is employed to designate the compiler who embodied the first two chapters in the canonical form of the First Gospel. Similarly, Luke = the compiler of the Third Gospel in its present form (i.e., no doubt St. Luke).

³ This is well brought out by the writer of the articles on the Virgin Birth (Mr. T. Allen Hoben) which appeared in the American Journal of Theology, vol. vi (July and October, 1902) ; cf. esp. pp. 473 ff. The same writer also shews very clearly that the Nativity-Narratives of Matthew and Luke cannot be deductions from the Gospel of James (Prot-evangelium Jacobi). "The Gospel of James," he concludes, "seems rather to be the fanciful working out of the canonical stories" (ib., p. 478).

⁴ Once "his father and his mother" (ii. 33).

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

sorrowing " (ii. 48). It is quite clear that Jesus was popularly looked upon by His contemporaries as Joseph's son by natural generation. On the other hand, both the First and the Third Gospels contain special sections dealing with the circumstances of the birth of Jesus in detail, and, though obviously independent, the two traditions embodied in the Nativity-Narratives agree in stating unequivocally that Jesus was born of a virgin-mother without the intervention of a human father (Matthew i. 18 ; Luke i. 34, 35).

No real inconsistency is, however, necessarily involved in the narratives as they stand. The secret of Jesus' birth may have been for long jealously guarded within the narrow circle of persons among whom it was originally known. It apparently formed no part of the early Apostolic teaching and preaching, and was not included in the common form of the Synoptic Gospel-Tradition (note that the Second Gospel begins with the Baptism). In preserving, therefore, the popular references to Jesus as Joseph's son, the First and Third Gospels conform to psychological and historic truth. In one part of the narrative, popular opinion is accurately reflected and expressed ; in the other, knowledge of a special character, derived from private sources.

That no inconsistency was felt to exist in this double use of description appears from the fact that it occurs even in the Apocryphal Gospels, where the virginity of the mother of Jesus is often insisted upon with unnecessary stress. Thus in the Gospel of pseudo-Matthew (ch. xxvii.) the following, e.g., occurs: "And some went away to the chief priests, and to the chiefs of the Pharisees, and told them that Jesus the son of Joseph had done great signs," etc. A few pages further on (ch. xxx.), Jesus is made to say: "But I am an alien in your courts, because I have no carnal parent."

INTRODUCTORY

On the other hand, if such references as those cited above from the Gospels had exhibited a mechanical consistency in describing Jesus as the son of Mary (to the entire exclusion of Joseph), the representation would justly have been impugned as violating the canons of historical and psychological truth.

In social life and as a member of the Jewish nation, Jesus, during His earthly life, would necessarily be regarded as Joseph's son. As Dalman has pointed out: "If no other fatherhood was alleged, then the child must have been regarded as bestowed by God upon the house of Joseph"; and while Joseph was alive, Mary and her son were undoubtedly under his legal protection. This consideration will help to explain the fact that both genealogies trace the Davidic descent of Jesus through Joseph (not through Mary). On any view, Jesus belonged to the family of Joseph; and if any formal and official birth-register ever had an independent existence in the Temple or elsewhere, Jesus would naturally appear therein as Joseph's son.

It will be necessary to refer to some of these points at greater length in the pages that follow. In the succeeding chapters it is proposed to discuss the birth-narratives of the First and Third Gospels (chapters ii.-v.), the Birth and Childhood of Jesus in the Apocryphal Gospels (ch. vi.), the evidence of the other New Testament writings and the earliest Christian tradition (outside the Gospels) (ch. vii.), and the alleged parallels from heathen sources (ch. viii.). In a final chapter (ix.), an attempt will be made to appraise the results that have been reached.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

CHAPTER II

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. MATTHEW (MT.)

I.—The Jewish Character of Matthew I. and II.

THE first impression produced by the perusal of Mt.'s narrative is, undoubtedly, that we have here a genuine product of the Jewish spirit. In spirit, as well as in letter and substance, it reflects the characteristic features of Jewish habits of thought and expression. How strong this impression is—and how well founded—may be gathered from the remarks of so unprejudiced an observer as Prof. S. Schechter. "The impression," he says, "conveyed to the Rabbinic student by the perusal of the New Testament is in many parts like that gained by reading an old Rabbinic homily. On the very threshold of the New Testament he is confronted by a genealogical table,¹ a feature not uncommon in the later Rabbinical versions of the Old Testament, which are rather fond of providing Biblical heroes with long pedigrees. They are not always accurate, but have, as a rule, some edifying purpose in view. . . In the second chapter of Matthew the Rabbinic student meets with many features known to him from the Rabbinic narratives about the birth of Abraham; the story of the Magi, in particular, impresses him as a homiletical illustration of Numb. xxiv. 17: 'There shall come a Star out of Jacob,' which Star the interpretation of the Synagogue referred to the Star of the Messiah.”¹

¹ Cf. : Moreh Neboche ha-zeman (Krochmal), p. 45.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

It is not necessary at this point to insist further on the admittedly Jewish character of the genealogy in the First Gospel. But it is worth recalling here that the representation of the relations between Joseph and Mary in Matt. i. is in strict accordance with Jewish law, according to which a betrothed woman “occupied the same status as a wife,” and the child bestowed upon her, if recognized by the father, “must” (to use Dalman’s words) “have been regarded as bestowed by God upon the house of Joseph.”²

Another point that is important in this connexion is the explanation of the name Jesus in v. 21 (“He shall be called Jesus because he shall save,” etc.). This involves a play upon words which points to a Hebrew origin (yēshu’a yôshî’a), at any rate, for this particular verse. Without affirming a Hebrew original for the Nativity-Narrative of Mt. as it stands (which is a highly precarious hypothesis), this indication at least serves to suggest that the compiler was writing for readers who were not wholly unacquainted with Hebrew, and who, at any rate, could appreciate the significance of the connexion between the Hebrew words yēshû’a (Jesus) and yôshî’a (shall save); that is, it may be inferred, he was writing for Hellenistic Jews who were not

¹ Some Rabbinic Parallels to the New Testament (J.Q.R., xii., pp. 418 ff.). See also additional note 1 at end of this chapter.

² Dalman, Words, p. 320.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. MATTHEW

out of touch with Palestine, and to whom the Hebrew Bible would not be altogether unfamiliar.¹

But what seems to us to be an even more decisive indication of the influence of Palestine in this narrative, is the elaborate explanation and justification of the name "Nazarene" (Ch. ii. 22, 23), as applied to Our Lord. In this way the compiler turns the edge of the reproach levelled at the Christian Messiah in the characteristically Palestinian-Jewish designation of Jesus as "The Nazarene" (yēshû'a ha-nosrî).²

It may be concluded, then, that the whole narrative embodied in the first two chapters of the First Gospel is thoroughly Jewish in form and general conception, and that, while Hellenistic colouring is unmistakably present in the story, it shows decisive indications of the influence of Palestine, and is, in fact, addressed to a circle of Hellenistic Jews who were under Palestinian influence.³ A word must now be said about the

¹ It is noticeable that the play upon words referred to above can only be elucidated by a Hebrew—not an Aramaic—original. The writer believes that Mt. i. 20 and 21 was originally current in a (poetical) Hebrew form among the primitive Jewish-Christian Community of Palestine (see below). The idea of a Messianic redemption from sin is characteristically Jewish-Christian (cf. Luke i. 77, with Plummer's note I.C.C.).

² See on this point further below, and cf. the Additional Note 2 at end of this chapter.

³ Mr. Arthur Wright (Synopsis of the Gospels,² p. xxxii.) also concludes that the First Gospel "assumed its present form in a community of Greek-speaking Jews," and suggests that its home was Alexandria. But, if this were so, we should expect the summary of the Decalogue cited integrity of the narrative, and its historical character and significance.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

II.—The Nativity-Narrative an Integral Part of the First Gospel

Does the Nativity-Narrative (Mt. i.–ii.) form an integral part of the First Gospel as it left the compiler's hands? According to some scholars, the answer to this question must be a decided negative. Thus, Ad. Merx,¹ after discussing the genealogy and arguing for the originality of the reading of the Sinaitic Syriac Palimpsest in i. 16 (Joseph . . . begat Jesus who is called the Christ), concludes that the following narrative (i. 18–ii. 23) formed no part of the original Matthew, which began the history at iii., at the point where the narrative of the Second Gospel commences; the only difference between the two Evangels being that the original form of the First Gospel had prefixed to it the Birth-Register embodied in Mt. i. 1–17.

To us, this conclusion seems to be wholly irreconcilable with the data afforded by the genealogy itself. The remarkable additions in vv. 3, 5, and in Mt. xix. 18, to exhibit the order : (a) adultery, (b) murder, (c) theft, which, though not peculiar to Egypt (cf., e.g., James ii. 11), was, at least, the characteristic Egyptian sequence (Philo, Clement of Alexandria, The Nash Papyrus of the Decalogue in Hebrew, etc.). The conditions seem to be satisfied best by supposing some part of Syria (? the neighbourhood of Antioch) to be its place of origin (cf. iv. 24, where Palestine is actually called "Syria." Different designations are employed in the other Gospels).

¹ Das Evangelium Matthäus nach der syr . . . Palimpsestübers., etc. (Berlin, 1902.) Cf. esp. p. 15.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. MATTHEW

3 b. of the names of certain women are clearly out of place in a formal genealogy of Joseph, unless they are dictated by some apologetic purpose. They are doubtless intended, as Mr. (now Archdeacon) Willoughby C. Allen has pointed out,¹ "to prepare the mind of his (the evangelist's) readers for the following narrative as in some sort foreshadowing the overruling of circumstances by the Divine Providence in the case of the Virgin Mary."

From the genealogy itself it may, therefore, be inferred (whatever be the true text of i. 16) that the subsequent narrative is its proper sequel; and from the special didactic character of the genealogy which fundamentally dominates its structure, and so entirely accords with the distinctive peculiarities of the Gospel as a whole) it may safely be inferred that both the birth-register and its sequel are the work of the compiler of the First Gospel.²

III.—The General Character and Historical Significance of St. Matthew's Nativity-Narrative

What, then, is the general character and historical significance of St. Matthew's narration (Mt. i. and ii.) ? To us it seems to exhibit in a degree that can hardly be paralleled elsewhere in the New Testament the characteristic features of Jewish Midrash or Haggada.¹ It sets forth certain facts and beliefs in a fanciful and imaginative setting, specially calculated to appeal to Jews. The justification for this procedure lies in the peculiar character and idiosyncrasy of the readers to whom it is addressed. The same tendency can be seen at work all through the First Gospel, and even elsewhere in the New Testament (e.g., in St. Paul²), though in a far less pronounced form. The task that confronts the critical student is to disentangle the facts and beliefs—the fundamental ground-factors on which the narration is built—from their decorative embroidery.

¹ Exp. T. xi. 136. See also the same writer's Commentary on St. Matthew, I.C.C., p. 5.

² These points have been well brought out in the article referred to in the previous note. Mr. Allen (St. Matthew, p. 5) says: "There is no sufficient ground for supposing that the genealogy ever existed apart from the Gospel. The references to Tamar, Rahab, Ruth, Bathsheba, can only be explained as due to the Editor of the Gospel, who saw in the life histories of these women a divine over-ruling of history from which a right understanding of Mary's virginity might be drawn."

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

What, then, are these fundamental data ?

(a) The Genealogy (i. 1–17)

The artificial and Midrashic character of the genealogy is obvious and admitted. It is dominated by a didactic purpose. This is clearly shown in its structure (3×14 generations), in the insertion of “the King” in v. 6 (τὸν Δαυεὶδ τὸν βασιλέα), which, to borrow Mr. Allen’s words, “seems clearly to show that the compiler wishes to emphasize the acquisition of royal power in David, its loss at the captivity, its recovery in the Messiah. It is hardly necessary to prove (he goes on to say) that elsewhere in the Gospel the Kingship of Christ is brought into relief";¹ and also in the additions of the names of certain women, already referred to.

¹ On the subject of Midrashic elements in Biblical Literature, see the remarks of Prof. S. R. Driver in his Commentary on Daniel (Cambridge Bible), p. lxxi. f., (esp. p. lxxii.), and cf. K. Budde, The Religion of Israel to the Exile (New York, 1899), p. 2 f.

² See, e.g., F. W. Farrar, The Life and Work of St. Paul, Excursus IV (St. Paul a Hagadist).

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. MATTHEW

The explanation of the three fourteens put forward long ago by Gfrörer² seems to us to be quite possible. He suggests that it is based upon the numerical value of the Hebrew letters which make up the name David (ד = 4 ו = 6 ו = 4), the threefold repetition being due to the fact that the name is made up of three letters.

By this means, the genealogy was invested with the character of a sort of numeral acrostic on the name David (דוד). However artificial such a procedure may seem to us, it is thoroughly Jewish, and could easily be illustrated in other ways. Thus, a Rabbinical dictum runs: "The Book of Chronicles (which, it should be remembered, was the source and fount for genealogical lists par excellence) was only given for the sake of being interpreted," or, as we might render the Hebrew term (lidrōsh), "for Midrashic purposes" (i.e., for the moral and edifying lessons that may be deduced herefrom³). It is worth noting also that its ascending structure (Abraham begat Isaac; and

¹ Op. cit. ibid.

² Die heilige Sage II, p. 9 note. So by gematria the number of the Beast "666 (Rev. xiii. 18) = nērōn Kēsar (i.e., Nero Caesar). See the Commentaries ad loc.

³ Lō nittenû dibrē ha-yāmîm 'ellā lidrōsh (Lev. rabbā i. 1).

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Isaac begat Jacob, etc.) is exactly similar to that of the little genealogy of David that closes the Book of Ruth, which may also have been appended for apologetic purposes.

The fundamental fact which underlies the genealogy of the First Gospel, and to which it bears witness, is the Davidic descent of the family of Joseph to which Jesus belonged. Its artificial form merely serves to disguise a genuine family tradition, which may have been embodied in a real birth-register. May it not be a sort of Midrashic commentary, in genealogical terms, on the real genealogy which is more correctly preserved in the Third Gospel?

To us it also seems probable that, in making the remarkable additions of the names of the women in vv. 3, 5, and 6 b, the compiler intended to anticipate (or meet) Jewish calumnies regarding Jesus' birth, which were afterwards amplified in so nauseous a fashion in later Jewish literature, and which find their explanation in a distortion of the Christian version of the Virgin Birth.¹ The compiler implicitly, and by anticipation, rebuts this reproach by throwing it back upon the Royal House of Judah.²

As has already been pointed out, some scholars hold

¹ For the Jewish literature referring to Our Lord's birth see Appendix I.

² Mr. A. Wright (*Synopsis*² p. xlii.) accounts for the relatively late appearance of the doctrine of the Virgin Birth by supposing it to have been kept back until conflict with heresy brought it forward.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. MATTHEW

that the genealogy set forth in Matt. i. 1-17, originally existed in an independent form, and was taken over by the compiler of the First Gospel, who may have added the names of the women in vv. 3, 5, and 6 b.; and in this form it plainly stated that Joseph . . . begat Jesus (v. 17). But against this view is the artificial character of the genealogy already referred to above. It can hardly be regarded as in any sense an actual birth-register (its real purpose is not historical, but didactic. It is merely an embodiment, in genealogical form—a form specially calculated to appeal to Jewish readers—of the idea that Jesus belonged, through His relation to Joseph, to the royal family of David. Such a purpose exactly accords with the whole presentation of Mt. There is therefore no sufficient reason to regard it as anything else than the work of Mt. Even if the reading Joseph . . . begat Jesus be correct, it need not imply a belief in the natural generation of Jesus. It obviously does not do so, if the writer of vv. 18-25 also composed the genealogy itself. For he immediately proceeds, as if to correct any possible misapprehension: Now, as a matter of fact, the birth of Christ was in this wise (v. 18). It is often forgotten that a formal genealogy makes no provision for such an unique event as a virgin birth. The compiler is endeavouring to express two things which he regarded as facts: (1) Jesus belonged to the royal family of Judah; (2) Jesus is virgin-born. The fact that Jesus and His mother were taken under Joseph's protection, and thus became members of his family, was sufficient to establish the relationship, for all legal and ordinary purposes, of "father and son" between Joseph and Jesus. This fact is expressed, in genealogical language by the terms (if the reading be correct): Joseph . . . begat Jesus.¹

¹ The originality of the reading is, however, open to grave doubts: see, for a discussion of the textual evidence, Appended Notes (1), pp. 215 ff.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

(b) The Birth-Narrative (i. 18-25)

In the narrative that follows (i. 18-25) we are confronted by similar phenomena—the underlying fact accompanied by explanation. The fact assumed and explicitly stated is the Virgin Birth, which is supported (in the compiler's characteristic manner) by a citation from Scripture, viz., the LXX. version of Isa. vii. 14.

Now, it is generally agreed that the narrative cannot have been suggested by the citation. It is certainly remarkable that Isa. vii. 14, is the only passage in the LXX. (with one exception, viz., Gen. xxiv. 43), where the Hebrew word “alma,” which means a young woman of marriageable age, is rendered παρθένος (“virgin”); in the overwhelming majority of instances παρθένος corresponds to the proper Hebrew equivalent bēthūlā. Moreover, of any Messianic application among the Jews of these words concerning the Virgin’s Son, there is not elsewhere, we are assured on the high authority of Prof. Dalman, even a “trace.”¹ Consequently, we are justified in the conclusion that the narrative was not suggested by the citation,

¹ Words (p. 270). For a further discussion of the LXX. rendering of this passage see below, p. 169.

Certainly παρθένος in such a connexion can scarcely be accidental (contrast Gen. xxiv. 48, in this respect). Badham’s attempt (Academy, 8th June, 1895) to show that the belief that the Messiah was to be born of a virgin was current among Palestinian and Alexandrian Jews rests upon highly precarious and uncertain evidence (mostly quotations from Martin and others from Midrashic texts which cannot be verified. In some cases, they look like Christian interpolations). See Appended Notes (2), p. 218 f.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. MATTHEW

but the citation by the assumed fact of the narrative. Another point brought out and emphasized in the quotation is the significance of the term Immanuel. Jesus is represented as realizing in Himself the prophetic word about Immanuel, not because He bore Immanuel's name, but because in His person the full significance of the name "God with us" had become a fact. The name, according to M. Halévy, is interpreted not metaphorically, but literally as meaning that God had appeared among men in the person of Jesus; in other words, that Jesus is God Incarnate. This representation is also reinforced by the explanation of the personal name Jesus as meaning one who saves His people from their sins, a function reserved in the Old Testament for God alone, which could be exercised by no merely human being.

The narrative of Mt. therefore, though it moves, to use M. Halévy's words, "dans une atmosphère phariseenne,"¹ must on this view be regarded as dominated by an advanced Christology.

We believe, however, that this view is not widely shared by Christian critical scholars. Thus, the writer of the article on "The Virgin Birth" in the American Journal of Theology already referred to (for July, 1902) explains the meaning of the birth-story in Matthew as follows: "Matthew's thought seems to be," he says, "that the wonder-working spirit of God exclusive of human agency, caused Mary to conceive; that by reason of this fact, she was innocent of any wrong such as that the suspicion of which had troubled Joseph ; and that at the same time such a birth, being in accord with the Immanuel-prophecy, marked the child to be born as the Messiah, the Saviour of His people, as the one spoken of in Isaiah, chapters vii. and viii., to be the deliverer of his nation in the impending war. Thus the application of the prophetic and symbolic expression ' Immanuel ' was not for the purpose of designating the nature of the child, but rather his work, which was to be national and messianic. The result of the nation's sins was always the withdrawal of God ; but the Messiah would lead them in righteousness and save them from that abandoning by God which was at the same time the result of their sins and the cause of their impotence and subjection. The term ' Immanuel,' then, is the prophetic and symbolic designation for Saviour." ¹

¹ Études évangéliques (premier fascicule), p. 163.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

According to this view, the compiler's main concern is to explain something which was obviously regarded as a fact within the Christian circle to which he belonged, but which was a source of reproach to the Jewish circles outside, whose objections he constantly had in mind when composing his Gospel. Such a birth as that described, he contends, actually fulfils the prophetic word about Messiah's birth ; beyond this he does not go. In other words, his governing purpose is not theological or speculative, but apologetic and practical.

¹ Op. cit., p. 479.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. MATTHEW

(c) The Episodes in Chapter ii.

The form of the narrative embodied in chapter ii. exhibits much the same characteristics as the preceding. Its Midrashic character is evident throughout, and it is governed by an apologetic purpose. But the dominant facts and beliefs do not show so obviously on the surface. Throughout, the evangelistic writer, according to Zahn,¹ is drawing an elaborate parallel between Israel's national history and the personal history of the Christian Messiah. Just as the genealogy is designed to shew that the birth of the Messianic King forms the climax of Israel's history, so here, especially in the episode of the Flight into and Return from Egypt, the writer intends Israel to draw a parallel between the history of its own national youth and the episodes of the early years of Jesus. The fatherly relationship that had been metaphorically ascribed to Jahveh as regards Israel (e.g., Deut. xxxii. 13 : Of the Rock that begat thee thou art unmindful, and hast forgotten God that gave thee birth)² is, the Evangelist implies, fulfilled in a real and literal sense in Jesus ; who, though belonging to the family of David, and, therefore, David's son, was the Son of God, without the intervention of a human father, by the power of the Holy Ghost. Consequently, the citation from Hosea xi. 1 (Out of Egypt have I called my son), which in its original context can have only a national reference, is, from the Evangelist's standpoint, a perfectly consistent proceeding. The use of Scriptural citations, throughout, is, indeed, remarkable. The writer regards the prophetic words as charged with a wealth of hitherto unexhausted meaning, which, in the light of Jesus' life-history, have acquired a new or widely extended significance. He constantly introduces such citations with the striking formula "that it might be fulfilled" (ἵνα πληρωθῇ), and when this is modified (as, e.g., in ii. 17, τότε ἐπληρώθη), the alteration is probably intentional.

¹ Das Evangelium des Matthäus, p. 103 f.

² Contrast Is. lxiii. 16.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

The narratives, then, have a basis in fact, or what is assumed to be or regarded as fact. But in form they have often been assimilated to earlier models and display unmistakable Midrashic features. Thus, the form in which the episode of the Return from Egypt is narrated in vv. 20 and 21 is clearly modelled upon the LXX. of Exodus iv. 19, 20 (the return of Moses from Midian to Egypt).

And this, perhaps, affords the true key for interpreting the apologetic significance of the rest of the narrative. The Evangelist intends to suggest a likeness between the divinely guided career of Moses, the instrument of Israel's redemption from Egypt, and the Messianic Redeemer who saves His people from their sins—the type, of course, being far transcended by the antitype.

Thus, the Story of the Magi, with its astrological features, has a very striking parallel in the Midrash Rabbā to Exodus in the section which deals with the birth of Moses. In the passage in question, we are told that Pharaoh's astrologers perceived that the mother of the future redeemer of Israel (i.e., Moses) was with child, and that this redeemer was destined to suffer punishment through water. Not knowing whether the redeemer was to be an Israelite or an Egyptian, and being desirous to prevent the redemption of Israel, Pharaoh ordered that all children born henceforth, should be drowned.¹

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. MATTHEW

To us, this Midrashic story seems to have exercised an obvious influence on the form of Mt.'s narrative, the underlying motive of which is to shew that the prophecy of Deut. xviii. 15 ("The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me," etc.) was fulfilled in the birth of Jesus, in whom the narrator saw a second and greater Moses. Prof. Schechter, indeed, following Wünsche,² has suggested that the episode of the star is a "homiletical illustration of Numb. xxiv. 17 ('There shall come forth a star out of Jacob'), which the Targumim refer to the star of the Messiah"³ But here the star is identified with the Messiah; and, moreover, in Mt.'s narrative there is no direct ¹ For text and translation of the passage, see Appended Notes (3), p. 221. It may, of course, be objected that the Midrash is a comparatively late compilation (8th to 12th cent. A.D.); but it embodies much earlier material. Thus, the story referred to above is alluded to in T.B. Sanhedrin 101 b., and in its main features was known to Josephus (Ant. ii. 9, 2). It was, no doubt, therefore, current in the time when Mt. composed his narrative.

² Neue Beiträge zur Erläuterung der Evangelien, p. 12.

³ For the Targum renderings see the Additional Note (1) at end of this chapter.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

citation of the Numbers passage, as we should expect if that had been an influential factor in the representation. Another influential idea that may be detected at work in the narrative is the desire to suggest the homage of the Gentile world (cf. Is. lx. 3 f., 6; Ps. lxxviii. 29, lxxii. 10), as well as the essential divergence between the spiritual kingship of the Messiah, and the earthly kingship of secular rulers (such as Herod), who are instinctively hostile to the new force that has entered upon the stage of humanity.

What are the facts and ideas that underlie the narrative as a whole?

(i) That Jesus was born at Bethlehem—a fact which is independently attested by St. Luke (cf. also John vii. 41, 42).

(ii) It is not improbable that the episode of the Flight into Egypt may have a basis in fact in some incident of Jesus' early life for the following reasons:

(a) it is in accordance with Mt.'s method to frame his narrative on a basis of what he regarded as fact;

(b) because the story is confirmed indirectly by the obviously independent tradition, which is preserved (with very early attestation) in the Talmud,¹ that Jesus brought magical powers from Egypt with which he later worked many miracles. This may very possibly have owed its origin to a distorted version of an oral tradition which may go back to the early Jewish-Christian Community of Palestine :

¹ T.B. Aboda Zara 16 b, 17 a, Midrash to Eccles. i. 8. The story is given on the authority of R. Elieser ben Hyrkanos (c. 80–120 A.D.). The tradition that Jesus learned magic in Egypt and so was able to work apparent miracles later, is found in Origen contra Celsum i. 38; it is one of the sneering explanations that Celsus gives.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. MATTHEW

and

(iii) the last section of the Chapter (vv. 19-23) implies that the Evangelist belonged to a Christian Community whose members bore the common designation of Nazarene (the characteristically Oriental name for "Christian"). This part of the narrative also attests the fact (which appears in the Lukan account) that Jesus, whilst born at Bethlehem, was brought up at Nazareth. It is worth noting also that the significance of the allusion to the dictum of the prophets, "He shall be called a Nazarene," can only be elucidated by reference to the Hebrew Messianic terms: neṣer ("shoot"), ṣemah ("sprout"), and nazir ("Nazirite"). In the LXX. equivalents, the indispensable assonance is lost.¹

¹ Neṣer = "shoot." (cf. Is. xi. 1) ; ṣemah = "sprout" (cf. Jer. xxiii. 5 ; Zech. iii. 8, vi. 12) ; and nazir = "Nazirite." All these terms have a sound more or less similar to "Nazarene."

It is specially noteworthy that the Targum equivalent of neṣer ("shoot") in the Messianic passage Is. xi. 1, is Messiah (meshihā). This will be evident when the renderings of the Hebrew text and of the Targum are set side by side—

Heb. 1 a. A branch shall spring from Jesse's stock.

Targ. 1 a. The King shall come forth from the sons of Jesse.

Heb. 1 b. And a shoot from his roots shall bear fruit.

Targ. 1 b. And from his children's children the Messiah shall grow up.

See, further, Additional Note (2) at the end of this chapter.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

ADDITIONAL NOTE (1).—The Star of the Magi and the Star of the Messiah.

(See art. Star by the writer in Hastings's DCG II 674 ff.)

The Star of the Magi (Mt. ii. 1-12).—In its main outlines the story of the Visit of the Magi to Jerusalem and Bethlehem is probably based upon what the compiler of the First Gospel believed to be facts. It rests upon a historical basis. The widespread expectation of the coming of a World-Redeemer, about the time of the beginning of the Christian era, and the interest of Eastern astrologers in his advent in the West are well attested, and may well have led to some such visit as is described in Mt.¹ It must be remembered, however, that Mt.'s narrative is governed by an apologetic purpose. It was written for the special purpose of meeting the needs and objections of Jewish readers. As has already been pointed out above, one influential motive at work in Mt. ii. seems to be a desire on the part of the Evangelist to suggest a likeness between the divinely guided career of Moses, the instrument of Israel's redemption from Egypt, and the Messianic Redeemer who saves His people from their sins.

But perhaps the leading motive in Mt.'s narrative, in this section of it, is to suggest the homage of the Gentile world, and the selection of the gifts (gold, frankincense, and myrrh) may have been ¹ See esp. the admirable discussion in W. C. Allen's "St. Matthew" (ICC), pp. 11-15.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. MATTHEW

nfluenced by passages from Old Testament Messianic prophecy which predict the allegiance of the nations (Is. lx. 1 f., 5 ; Ps. lxxii. 11, 12, 15).¹

It is noticeable, however, that Mt. here does not cite any proof-passages from the Old Testament (in vv. 5, 6, the quotation from Micah is placed in the mouth of the Sanhedrin). If the compiler had in mind the passage in Numb. xxiv. 17 ("There shall come forth a star out of Jacob," etc.), as has been sometimes supposed,² his failure to cite it would, indeed, be surprising. But it is to be observed that in Numbers the star is identified with the Messiah, and would hardly be applicable in this story. (See, further, below.)

It may be, as Zahn³ suggests, that Mt. regards the episode of the Visit of the Magi to render homage to the New-Born King not so much in the light of fulfilment of ancient prophecy as a new prophecy, which indicates that the Messiah Jesus, who has been born to save His own people from their sins (i. 21), will be sought out and honoured by heathen ; while the leading representatives of the religious thought and worship of Israel ask no questions concerning Him, and leave it to the tyrant, who enslaves them, to concern himself about the true King of the Jews, and then only with the object of compassing His destruction." On this view,

¹ Notice esp. Is. lx. 3, "And the Gentiles shall come to thy light."

² e.g., by Wünsche, Neue Beiträge zur Erläuterung der Evangelien, p. 12.

³ Das Evangelium des Matthäus (1903), p. 101.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

the star and the astrologers—the Magi—become significant as proof that God uses even such imperfect means as astrology for bringing the heathen to the knowledge of the truth.

The “star” of the narrative doubtless refers to some particular star,¹ or to some unique astral phenomenon which the Magi were led to connect with the birth of the World-Redeemer in the West. The detail about the star “which they saw at its rising” going “before them, until it came and stood still above (the place) where the child was” is, doubtless, not intended to be understood literally. It is merely a poetical description of the illusion which makes it appear that a luminous heavenly body keeps pace, and maintains its relative position, with the movement of the observer.

Various attempts have been made to identify the “Star” of this narrative with some exceptional heavenly phenomenon, and to fix its occurrence by means of astronomical calculation. The most famous of these is that of Kepler (1605), who thought of a close conjunction of the planets Jupiter and Saturn in the constellation Pisces—a rare combination which takes place only once in 800 years, and which occurred no

¹ See Mackinlay: The Magi: how they recognized Christ's star (London, 1907).

In an article published in the J T S, x. 116 ff., Mr. J. K. Fotheringham argues that “King of the Jews” in the question of the Magi is to be taken literally. “The Magi were in search not of a Messiah, or of any unique person, but of a king such as might be born in each generation, the omens for whose birth might be found in astrological works.” The whole narrative, however, suggests a Messianic reference. Cf. also Voigt: Die Geschichte Jesu und die Astrologie (Leipzig, 1911).

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. MATTHEW

fewer than three times in the year 747 A.U.C. (= B.C. 7). See Edersheim, L J M i., p. 212 f.) But the data are too indefinite to allow of any certain conclusion in the matter. Moreover, the ignorance displayed by Herod and "all Jerusalem" as to the nature of the Star hardly suggests that its appearance would strike any but practised astrologers.

The association of the birth of great men with such phenomena was a common feature in the ancient world, where astrology was held in high esteem. Thus, e.g., "on the birth-night of Alexander, Magi prophesied from a brilliant constellation that the destroyer of Asia was born." (Cf. Cic. de Divinatione, i. 47, cited by Allen, op. cit., p. 12.) On Jewish ground, we have already seen the same idea at work in connexion with the birth of Moses in the Midrash passage cited above. Edersheim (op. cit. i., p. 211 f.) also cites some late Midrashic passages which connect the coming of Messiah with the appearance of a star. But these are of very uncertain value.

The Star of the Messiah.—Sometimes the Messiah Himself is metaphorically referred to as a Star,¹ a description which is based, apparently, on Numb. xxiv. 17—

*There shall come forth a star out of Jacob,
And a sceptre shall rise out of Israel ;*

In the Targum Onkelos this is rendered—

*When a king shall arise out of Jacob,
And the Messiah shall be anointed from Israel ;*

And in pseudo-Jonathan—

When the mighty King of Jacob's House shall reign, And the Messiah, the Power-sceptre of Israel, shall be anointed.

¹ The same word is used metaph. in Arabic for a ruler.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Here, it will be noticed, the Star is expressly identified with the Messianic King. A similar Messianic application of this passage meets us in the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, where [Judah, 24 (Greek text)] the following occurs—

*Over you a star shall proceed out of Jacob,
And a man shall arise from my seed like the Sun of righteousness (cf. Mal. iii. 20) ; cf. also Levi 18.*

There is, thus, good evidence that in the time of Christ the “ Star ” of Numb. xxiv. 17, was popularly identified with the Messianic King.¹ (See, further, the article Star already cited, where the evidence is fully given.)

ADDITIONAL NOTE (2).—On the epithet Nazarene :

He shall be called a Nazarene. (Matt. ii. 23.)

Some very difficult questions are involved in the explanation of “ Nazarene ” in this passage. They have been discussed by the writer in the article Nazarene in Hastings' D C G (II, pp. 235–237). An important discussion occurs in Dr. Burkitt's Syriac Forms of New Testament Names (pp. 15–18).

¹ It was apparently from Numb. xxiv. 17, Messianically interpreted, that the false Messiah Simeon derived his designation Bar-Kokba (“ Son of the Star ”). For an early Christian application of Numb. xxiv. 17, to Christ, cf. Justin Martyr. Apol. i. 32: Isaiah, another prophet, prophesying the same things by other expressions, thus spake : There shall rise a Star out of Jacob, and a blossom shall ascend from the root of Jesse, etc. The LXX. of Numb. xxiv. 17, is interesting. It runs : A star shall rise (ἀνατελεῖ) out of Jacob, a man shall spring (ἀναστήσεται ἄνθρωπος) out of Israel.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. MATTHEW

The most recent contribution to the subject is Mr. C. Burrage's Nazareth and the Beginnings of Christianity (Oxford, 1914). (The art. Nazareth in E B should not be overlooked in this connexion.)

It is important to note that there are two Greek equivalents of "Nazarene" in the New Testament, viz., Ναζαρηνός and Ναζωραῖος (the latter term might, perhaps, better be represented by "Nazorean")—in Westcott and Hort's text, Ναζαρηνός is used exclusively in Mark (i. 24, x. 47, xiv. 67, and xvi. 6); while in Matthew, John, Acts, and in Luke with the exception of iv. 34, where, however, it may be dependent upon the Markan source) Ναζωραῖος is used. Perhaps Ναζαρηνός was employed in the earliest source, and this was given up later for Ναζωραῖος.

Ναζαρονός is derived from Ναζαρά like Μογδαλονή from αγδαλά. The forms Ναζαρά, Ναζαρέτ, Ναζαρέθ, imply Hebrew forms našēra, našērath (cf. such forms as arēphath, I Kings xvii. 9, in Biblical Hebrew; cf. Dalman Gramm. d. Jüd.-Pal. Aram. 2 p. 152 n.).

Dalman thinks¹ that Ναζωραῖος implies a Hebrew form našôrai (connected, partly, with a by-form, našôrath of the place name). In this case, we might suppose that Ναζωραῖος (= našôrai) represents a dialectical form current in Judea (cf. esp. John xix. 19; Acts xxiv. 6). But it is by no means certain that Ναζωραῖος was originally connected with a place-name at all (see below).

The problem is complicated by a philological difficulty. The Hebrew form of Nazareth implied by the epithet regularly applied in the Talmud both to Jesus and His disciples (nôṣri nôṣrīm) requires that the place-name must have been spelt with a ṣādē (nāṣērā, nāṣērath). Now, in Hebrew and Aramaic words spelt with ṣādē, this letter (almost without exception) is transliterated in Greek by σ. We should, therefore, expect Νασαρηνός and Νασωπαῖος, and these may be the two original forms. Cheyne (art. Nazareth in E B) has argued that the name "Nazareth" in its original significance, in the earliest tradition of the Gospels, was the designation not of a town, but of a district, and "Nazarene" is primarily equivalent to "Galilean."¹ But, whether as the name of a town or district, it is best to assume that behind Ναζαρηνός (= Νασαρηνός) there lies a place-name nāṣērā or nāṣērath (or, possibly nôṣērath), while the form behind Ναζωπαῖος is either nāṣôrai (Hebrew) or nāṣûrā (Aram. = Heb. nēṣer, "branch"²). The appearance of ζ (instead of σ) in the Greek forms Ναζαρηνός and Ναζωπαῖος may perhaps be due to assimilation with the common Ναζιπαῖος of the LXX. (= "Nazirite"). In Ναζιπαῖος, of course, the ζ is philologically correct, being a transliteration of the Hebrew zayin in nāzîr. Of the various explanations of Matt. ii. 22 ("He shall be called a Nazorean") that have been proposed, the most important are the following—

¹ Op. cit., p. 178 n. 2.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

- (i) Those which connect it with the Hebrew

¹ See, however, Burkitt, op. cit., p. 17.

² Or, perhaps, the adjectival form nāṣurāyā. The Aramaic form nāṣûrā is guaranteed by the Syriac nāṣûrā = Surculus (Heb. nēṣer). See Payne-Smith: Thesaurus Syr., col. 2443.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. MATTHEW

word nēser = "branch," "shoot," in the Messianic passage, Is. xi. 1. If, as suggested above, we can assume an Aramic form nāṣūrāyā, the Greek form Ναζωπαῖος (Ναζωπαῖος) can be explained. Then, "Nazorean" = "the Messianic one," "the Messiah"; and the prophetic passage referred to is Is. xi. 1.

(ii) In one of the Servant-passages, Is. xlix. 6—which passages were undoubtedly applied to Jesus in early Jewish-Christian circles,¹ the unpointed text of the Hebrew has n-ṣ-w-r-y. It may be suggested that this was read as nāṣōrai and applied by Jewish-Christian exegesis to Jesus. The verse, so read and interpreted, would run: It is too light a thing that thou shouldst be my Servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and (shouldst be) the Nazorean (nāṣōrai) to restore Israel; I will also give thee for light of the Gentiles, etc.

(iii) If, as Cheyne's view desiderates, "Nazorean"² = "Galilean," the word of the prophets referred to in Matt. ii. 23, will be Is. ix. 1 f. ("the land of Zabulon, and the land of Naphtali . . . Galilee of the Gentiles") rather than Is. xi. 1. Perhaps the first of these explanations (i) is most satisfactory; (ii) may be regarded as a variation of it.

On either of these views, "Nazorean" has, primarily, no local significance. It is true that

¹ Cf. Luke ii. 23.

² i.e., interpreting Ναζωπαῖος (Ναζωπαῖος) as = nāṣōrai, an adjective derived from nāṣōrath, a by-form of nāṣērāth = Nazareth, a district (i.e., Galilee). Cheyne points out that "no such town as Nazareth is mentioned in the Old Testament, in Josephus, or in the Talmud."

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

St. Matthew connects it with the place "Nazareth." The transition may, perhaps, be explained as follows¹: It is clear from the New Testament data that the term "Nazarene" (Ναζαρηνός is exclusively used by St. Mark) was an early designation applied to Jesus and His disciples generally. It was, thus, the Jewish (Oriental) equivalent of the essentially Gentile term "Christian" (χριστιανός, cf. Acts xi. 26, xxvi. 28). "Nazarene" was not the title given by the Christians of Palestine to themselves, but by others outside the Christian fellowship (they probably used for themselves such terms as "believers," "brethren" [Acts ix. 30], "saints," "elect"). In time, "Nazarene" (i.e., Ναζαρηνός), which meant "one from the town or district of Nazareth," seems to have acquired a somewhat contemptuous, or, at any rate, hostile nuance (cf. John i. 46). The followers of "the Nazarene" had evidently been made to feel the reproach of the alleged Galilean origin of their Messiah. Moved by these influences, the Jewish-Christians seem to have transformed the title—which had now become in the mouths of their opponents an opprobrious one—into the honorific one Ναζωπαῖος, and to have adopted the latter as a substitute for the former. In this way, at any rate, St. Matthew seems to turn the edge of the reproach levelled at the Christian Messiah in the characteristically Jewish Palestinian designation of Jesus as "the Nazarene" (Yēshu'a ha-nôsrî).

¹ Cf. the art. (by the writer) Nazarene, in Hastings' D C G, ii. 235 f.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. MATTHEW

The selection of this particular Messianic term (Ναζωπαῖος) on the view just put forward, was dictated by the necessity of finding a counter-term to Ναζαρηνός. "Nazorean" is, thus, an honorific title, given by the disciples themselves to Jesus, and expresses the conviction that He was the Messiah of Is. xi. 1—the "Branch" of Messianic Prophecy. Its application to members of the Christian community naturally followed. (See more fully the article Nazarene in Hastings' D C G, already referred to.)

CHAPTER III

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE (I)

It is hardly necessary to shew in detail that the Nativity-Narrative embodied in the first two chapters of the Third Gospel is Jewish-Christian throughout. The matter has been well summed up by Usener in a single sentence. "In the whole tone and character of the narrative," he says, "its leading conceptions, its repeated employment of the Hebrew psalm-form, its familiarity with Jewish and its defective acquaintance with Roman conditions—the hand of a Jewish Christian is, as is now generally recognized, unmistakable."¹ It is refreshing, also, to find Usener defending the substantial integrity of the narrative (apart from the supposed interpolation in i. 34–35). Thus, referring to the attempt that has been made to separate the early history of John (ch. i.) and that relating to the birth and early childhood of Jesus (ch. i. and ii.), he says: "To separate the two sections from each other, as has been proposed, is not possible. They are firmly united: Zacharias' song of praise points to the Redeemer, and in the prophetic words of the aged Symeon is repeated the same Hebrew psalm-form as is seen in the hymns of Elizabeth and her husband."²

¹ EB iii, col. 3342 (art. Nativity).

² Objections have been urged against the historicity of the narrative that describes the birth of the Baptist. For one such objection, see Appended Notes (4).

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

In the case of one small part of the narrative, however, its integrity in the canonical text is (as has been mentioned) denied, viz., in the crucial 34th and 35th verses of the first chapter.¹ These are supposed, by all the representatives of the advanced critical school,² from Harnack downwards, to be an interpolation quite foreign to the context, and out of harmony with the Jewish-Christian character of the narrative as a whole.

In support of this contention, it is urged that in Luke ii. the view of the narrative is that Mary was Joseph's wife, and that Joseph was the natural father of Jesus (cf. ii. 32, "his father and his mother"; v. 41, "his parents"; v. 48, "thy father and I"); the Davidic pedigree of Jesus is traced through Joseph with the harmonistic explanation "as was supposed" (iii. 23); and with this agrees the early reading, apparently preserved in the Siniatic-Syriac, in ii. 5, "with Mary his wife." The narrative in ch. i. could be harmonized, it is urged, with that in ch. ii. if vv. 34 and 35—which contain the only explicit reference to the Virgin Birth in the Third Gospel—could be removed as an interpolation, though there is no external (MS.) evidence to warrant such a procedure. The excision of these verses as an interpolation is justified on the following grounds—³

¹ For the textual evidence regarding these verses, see Appended Notes (5), pp. 223 ff.

² With the distinguished exception of Gunkel; see below, p. 38.

³ So, besides Harnack, Holzmann, Pfeiderer, Schmiedel, and Usener.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

The reference to Elizabeth in v. 36 certainly seems to follow better on v. 33. In that passage, moreover, the child whose birth is announced is already designated messianically as "Son of the Most High"; but the title "Son of God" in v. 35 has a quite different signification; it denotes not official adoption, but actual origin: v. 35 is, thus, a doublet of vv. 31 and 32 on another plane. Moreover, the incredulity of Mary concerning the possibility of motherhood (v. 34) seems inexplicable in one already betrothed; yet it does not (like that of Zacharias, vv. 18-20) expose her to rebuke or penalty; the doubt seems introduced only to give occasion for the explanation in v. 35. The real reply of Mary to the original announcement in vv. 30-32-36-37 follows in v. 38: "Be it unto me according to thy word," and her submission to the heavenly will wins the blessing of Elizabeth (v. 42).¹

A closer examination of the suspected verses does not, however, lend any support to the theory of interpolation.

Their phraseology is unmistakably Hebraistic. Thus, the phrase "Holy Spirit shall come upon thee" (πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἐπελεύσεται ἐπί σε) may be illustrated from the LXX. The verb rendered "come upon" (ἐπέρχομαι) is often used in connexion with "Spirit" (πνεῦμα): and the whole expression has a verbal parallel in the LXX. of Is. xxxii. 15: ἕως ἂν ἐπέλθῃ ἐφ' ὑμᾶς πνεῦμα ἀφ' ὑψηλοῦ ("until there come upon you spirit from on high").

¹ J. Estlin Carpenter: The Bible in the XIXth Century, p. 486.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

The use of "Holy Spirit" (without the article) as denoting the power of God (without imputing to the "Spirit" any personal implication) may be paralleled also from the Psalter of Solomon (see Ryle and James on Ps. Sol., xvii. 42). To object (as Schmiedel and Soltau do) that, because "spirit" (rûah) in Hebrew is usually feminine, therefore the Holy Ghost (Heb. rûah ha-kôdesh) could not be represented in Hebrew-Christian circles as the father of Jesus, is beside the mark. "Holy Spirit" here is an impersonal term, and therefore no question of the sex of the "Spirit" is involved.

In the words that follow: "Power of the Most High shall overshadow thee" (δύναμις ὑψίστου ἐπισκιάσει σοι) we have, again, an echo of Old Testament language, and, in fact, the whole underlying idea, which is that of a theophany, can only be elucidated from the Old Testament. The verb rendered "overshadow" (ἐπισκιάζω) is that used in the LXX. of Exodus xl. 35, of the cloud which rested on the Tabernacle when it was filled with the "glory of the Lord."¹ As Prof. Briggs² has pointed out: "The annunciation represents the conception of Jesus as due to a theophany." And the method adopted for describing this in the suspected verses is suggested by the language of the Old Testament. "The entrance of God into His tabernacle and temple to dwell there in a

¹ Cf. also the theophanic cloud of the transfiguration narrative (Mt. xvii. 5; Mk. ix. 7; Luke ix. 34), where the same verb is used.

² The Messiah of the Gospels, p. 50.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

theophanic cloud would naturally suggest that the entrance of the divine life into the virgin's womb to dwell there would be in the same form of theophanic cloud."

The verses are of the same character as the rest of the narrative, and must be the work of a Jewish writer; and there is every reason to believe, with Gunkel, that they are translated from a Hebrew original. This consideration will help to elucidate the meaning of the announcement in v. 31 more closely. The Hebrew original of συλλαγήψη ("Thou shalt conceive") there would be a participle,¹ and the exact rendering would be: "Behold thou art conceiving now." An immediate conception is meant, not one that would naturally follow after Joseph had in due course taken her to wife; and this immediate conception is implied by the words "with haste" in v. 39. Besides, v. 36 ("And behold Elisabeth, thy kinswoman, she also hath conceived a son in her old age") implies that a conception of an extraordinary character has been mentioned in the previous verses in reference to Mary; and the words suggest that a not unnatural doubt and surprise on her part are being set at rest (cf. esp. v. 37: "For no word of God shall be impossible"). There would be nothing extraordinary in Mary's conceiving a son as Joseph's wife.

Again, the Lukan genealogy, far from discrediting, seems to us to offer a positive argument for the authenticity of the suspected verses. Jewish genealogies usually have some edifying purpose in view, and the list in Luke iii. 23-38, seems to be no exception to the rule. [The striking feature about it is that it traces the descent of Jesus right up to "Adam (the Son) of God." Evidently, in linking Adam to Christ, the editor or compiler intends to suggest that Christ is the Second Adam, the re-founder of the human race; and that just as the first Adam was Son of God by a direct creative act, so also was the second (by the power of the Holy Spirit). For genealogical purposes, it was necessary to link Jesus to previous generations through His foster-father Joseph. But the suggestion is that the Second Adam, like the first, owes His human existence to a direct creative act on the part of God. Luke iii. 38, thus supports the genuineness of i. 35 (υἱὸς θεοῦ), and the whole genealogy, viewed in the light of its edifying purpose, guarantees the original character of the alleged interpolation.

¹ Cf. the translations in the Hebrew New Testaments.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

The fact that the expression "Son of God" in the genealogy involves the occurrence of "Son" in the physical sense of origin exactly as in i. 35, has an important bearing on the objection noted above, viz., that while in v. 32 ("Son of the Most High") "Son" denotes official adoption, in v. 35 it describes actual physical origin. But the two ideas are not mutually exclusive. At the same time, it is difficult to see what can have suggested such an otherwise un-Jewish application of the term "son" in such a context, and amid language so Hebraistic, except the actual occurrence of the fact narrated.]

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

But the theory of interpolation is confronted with a further radical difficulty. It is not enough to remove the suspected verses to make the narrative congruous with a non-miraculous birth. The significant fact still remains that the figure of Joseph is quite subordinated in the Lukan account, while that of Mary is proportionately enhanced in lonely importance. This feature dominates the whole structure of Luke's first two chapters; and in this particular a sharp (and obviously designed) contrast is suggested between the nativity of John the Baptist and that of Jesus. While in the case of the Baptist's birth the annunciation is made to the father (i. 15 f.), in that of Jesus it is made to the mother (i. 38); and while the Baptist's birth is represented as the occasion of such profound joy on the part of Zacharias that the latter's dumbness is overcome, and he bursts into the strains of the Benedictus (i. 68-79), no such rôle is assigned to Joseph. What reason can be adduced for this deliberate minimizing of the part assigned to Joseph—a feature that characterizes the Lukan narrative throughout—except it be that the fundamental fact, dominating and forming the climax of the whole, is the miraculous birth of Jesus of a Virgin-mother?

Usener, indeed, partially perceives this difficulty, and therefore supposes a certain amount not only of interpolation, but also of omission to have taken place. "We are," he says, "in a position to infer with certainty from ii. 5, that in the original form of the narrative after i. 38 stood the further statement hardly to be dispensed with (even though judged inadmissible by the redactor who interpolated i. 34 f.), that Mary was then taken to wife by Joseph, and that she conceived by him.”¹

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

But, to produce anything approaching a consistent result, the present form of the narrative must be subjected to much more drastic treatment. The whole stress and emphasis of the narration must be altered; the prominence assigned to Mary must be got rid of; and a hymn of thanksgiving, corresponding to the Benedictus, ought, at least, to be assigned to Joseph.² In a word, the symmetry and substance of the Lukan account must be destroyed; it must be torn to shreds and wholly re-written.

Is it conceivable that the “original” form of the narrative can have undergone so radical a transformation as is desiderated by Usener’s hypothesis, and yet have produced the present balanced whole? To the writer, such a conclusion seems irreconcilable with the data afforded by a critical study of the account in its entirety. Usener’s theory, far from removing difficulties, only serves to raise fresh critical problems. It reduces the Lukan narrative to hopeless confusion, and (in view of its admittedly Jewish-Christian character) involves its genesis in insoluble obscurity.¹

¹ E B, col. 3350. Usener’s inference rests upon a misapprehension of what constituted an ancient Jewish marriage. See Appendix II.

² In fact, such a hymn of thanksgiving (the Magnificat) assigned to Mary, though some scholars would deny this. See Appended Notes (6), p. 226 f.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

The Origin of the Lukan Narrative

The Lukan narrative, then, in its integrity, may be regarded as Jewish-Christian through and through. It must have emanated from Jewish-Christian circles, and doubtless reflects the piety and worship of the early Palestinian Christian Church.

What account, then, is to be given of the origin of its present Greek canonical form? One commonly held theory is that the Lukan form is a direct translation from an Aramaic document. But, as has been pointed out by Lagarde, Resch, and Dalman, these early chapters "have throughout a colouring distinctly Hebrew, not Aramaic, and not Greek."² Dalman, however, thinks that "the assumption of a Hebrew document as the source for Luke i., ii. must, at any rate, be held as still unproved; and it might even be maintained," he adds, "that the strongly marked Hebrew style of these chapters is on the whole due, not to the use of any primary source, but to Luke himself. For here, as in the beginning of the Acts, in keeping with the marvellous contents of the narrative, Luke has written with greater consistency than usual in biblical style, intending so to do and further powerfully affected by the 'liturgic frame of mind' of which Deissmann speaks."¹ Dalman, however, goes too far in excluding altogether the use of Hebrew sources in the composition of the first two chapters of the Third Gospel. My own conclusion, arrived at independently, closely approximates to that of Prof. Briggs, whose words may be quoted. Briggs points out that the material of which the Gospel of the Infancy is composed is in the form of poetry embedded in prose narrative. This poetry is of the same kind as the poetry of the Old Testament. It has the same principles of parallelism and measurement of the lines by the beats of the accent, or by the number of separate words. . . . This poetry was translated from aramaic originals, and was doubtless written when translated by Luke. The Greek translation in some cases destroys the symmetry of the lines of aramaic poetry, obscures their measurement, and mars their parallelism. It is probable that the prose which encompasses this poetry comes from the authors of the Gospels, the poetry from other and probably several different authors. Therefore, we are not to look for an earlier written Gospel of the infancy of Jesus, but are to think of a number of early Christian poems with reference to that infancy from which the author of our Gospel made a selection. . . . These songs, which have been selected for use in the Gospel of Luke, doubtless represent reflection upon these events by Christian poets, who put in the mouths of angels, the mothers and the fathers, the poems which they composed. But the inspired author of the Gospel vouches for their propriety and for their essential conformity to truth and fact.”¹

¹ Soltau, indeed, finds no difficulty in carrying the critical analysis to extreme lengths, and discovers in the Lukan account, strata of different age and origin. Thus, according to him, Luke ii. 1-7 (in an earlier un-edited form) and ii. 21a, 22 to 40, embodies the oldest form of the original Jewish-Christian legend of Jesus' childhood. Then: "this Jewish-Christian tradition was entirely altered in Luke through the addition of two new elements" of heathen origin; viz., (1) the generation of Jesus through the Holy Spirit (i. 26-56); and, (2) the Angels' Song of Praise (ii. 8-20). At the same time, ii. 21b was interpolated (cf. op. cit., p. 26 f.). According to this writer, also, the episode of the Magi in Matt. ii. is of purely heathen origin, having been suggested by the journey of the Parthian King Tiridates through Asia Minor in 66 A.D., on a journey of homage to Nero (cf. op. cit., p. 40).

² Dalman: Words, p. 39.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

¹ Ibid.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

The only point on which I venture to differ from Prof. Briggs is as to the original language of these hymns. This may very well have been not Aramaic but Hebrew.² This hypothesis would account for the pronouncedly Hebraistic character of the narrative as a whole. The hymns themselves are obviously modelled on the psalm-poetry of the Old Testament. There is every reason to suppose that a part at least of the sacred poetry of the Old Testament—such as the Red Sea Song (Exod. xv.), the special Psalms for the days of the week, and a rudimentary form of the collection of psalms which afterwards bore the technical name

¹ The Messiah of the Gospels, pp. 42 ff.

² The above was written in 1903. In his volume New Light on the Life of Jesus, published in 1904, Prof. Briggs argues for a Hebrew original of the poems.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

the "Hallel," possibly, also, the "Psalms of degrees"—would be familiar in their Hebrew form to the Aramaic-speaking Jews of Palestine in the time of Christ, from their liturgical use in public worship. We have the analogous practice of the modern Jews to guide us. Though multitudes of modern Jews possess but the barest acquaintance with Hebrew as a language, they are perfectly familiar with, and sing with the utmost zest, their popular hymns—such as Yigdal and En Kēlôhēnâ—in their Hebrew form.¹ There is also the precedent of the so-called Psalter of Solomon. The remarkable resemblances in phraseology and diction between these "Psalms" and the Songs in St. Luke (the Magnificat, the Benedictus, the Angelic Hymn, and the Nunc Dimittis) have been pointed out in detail by Ryle and James in their classical edition of the Psalms of Solomon (p. xci. f.). These editors give good reasons for supposing that the psalms in question were "intended for public and even for liturgical use," and argue strongly for a Hebrew original. Exactly the same arguments may be applied to the hymns of the Nativity narratives. We conclude, therefore, that these hymns were composed in classical Hebrew for liturgical use, and were so used in the early Jewish-Christian Community of Palestine: and this conclusion accords with their primitive Christology, ¹ Yigdal, which is a metrical form of the creed of Simonides (1135–1204 A.D.), can be seen in Singer, p. 1 f.; and the 'En Kēlôhēnâ, which is more ancient, see Singer, p. 167 ("There is none like our God," etc.).

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

which betrays no knowledge of the Logos-doctrine of the Prologue to the Fourth Gospel, for instance.

The selection of the hymns and their setting in the prose narrative, with its "scenic" features and schematic and dramatic arrangement, betray the hand of the Greek historian, and are doubtless due to St. Luke himself.

The only serious argument known to us that militates against the view here advocated is the objection of Dalman that the expression ἐπεσκέψατο ἡμᾶς ἀνατολὴ ἐξ ὕψους ("whereby the day-spring from on high hath visited us," Luke i. 78, in the Song of Zacharias) is formed "entirely after the Greek Bible and quite impossible to reproduce in Hebrew."¹ It is clear that the word rendered "Dayspring" (ἀνατολή) could only go back to the Hebrew Semah, the word rendered "shoot" or "branch," and applied to the Messiah (Jer. xxiii. 5; Zech. iii. 8, vi. 12). But, according to Dalman, "the Hebrew Semah ('shoot') excludes the allusion to the light which follows in v. 79." Therefore, he concludes: "it is clear that in Luke, ch. i. an original in Greek lies before us."²

But it may be doubted whether an original Hebrew Semah in such a connexion would be involved in such disabilities. As is well known, Semah ("Branch") was a common designation of the Messiah, and is used practically as a proper name: and as Dalman himself points out, it is actually rendered in the Targum by the term "Messiah" (in Is. iv. 3). As such, of course, it could well be made the subject of such a verb as τεσκέψατο ("visited").

¹ Op. cit., p. 39.

² Op. cit., p. 224.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

But the question remains, is such a personal designation of the Messiah incompatible with the metaphor of light that immediately follows ("whereby the šemah from on high hath visited us to give light to them that sit in darkness")? The meaning of the word in Hebrew is not exactly "branch," but "shoot" or "offspring" (lit. what sprouts or brings up). Now it is significant that in Syriac both the verb šemah and the noun šemhā are constantly used of light and splendour, and associated ideas (e.g., šemhā = ἀπαύγασμα, "effulgence" in Heb. i. 3, and is directly applied to Christ). The Hebrew word Šemah may, thus, very well have been used here by Aramaic-speaking Jews in the Aramaic sense of "shining." Of this interpretation of the Hebrew term there may also be a trace in the LXX. of Is. iv. 3, where the expression translated "The branch (šemah) of the Lord shall be" (which was understood of the Messiah) is rendered ἐπιλάμψει θεός ("God shall shine"); i.e., the LXX. here (as often elsewhere) has interpreted a Hebrew word by an Aramaic parallel. It should be noted also that in the Hebrew of the Midrash¹ the verb sāmah actually occurs with the meaning "shine," "grow bright."

This association of the idea of light with the

¹ See, e.g., Cant. R. (to iii. 6).

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Messianic designation semah was, perhaps, facilitated by the conception of the Messianic light founded upon Is. lx. 1 :¹ while in the New Testament itself we have in Rev. xxii. 16, the remarkable identification of Jesus "the root and offspring of David" with "the bright, the morning star" (i.e., the Star of the Messiah, Numb. xxiv. 17).

It may be concluded, then, that the original of ἀνατολή ἐξ ὕψους ("Dayspring from on high") was semah mimmārôm; that this was a well-understood personal designation of the Messiah; that with it was associated the idea of light (possibly the light of the Messianic Star), while together with this idea that of the "sprout" or offspring was also included in the conceptual content of the expression²; and that the phrase semah mimmārôm (i.e., "Dayspring from on high") is a poetical equivalent of Messiah from heaven.

Relation of the Lukan and Matthaean Nativity-Narratives

That the Nativity-Narratives in the First and Third Gospels are essentially independent has already been indicated. But the fundamental facts

¹ Cf. Weber, Jüdische Theologie (1897), p. 397 f.

² See the Revelation passage quoted above; and cf. in illustration Justin Martyr, Apol. i. 32: Isaiah, another prophet, prophesying the same things by other expressions thus spake, "There shall rise a star out of Jacob, and a blossom shall ascend from the root of Jesse," etc. For the application of the Messianic light to Christ, cf. also the fragment of an old Christian hymn quoted in Ephes. v. 14 ("Christ shall shine upon thee").

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

on which they agree, and on which they revolve, may very well have been derived from a common source, viz., the early Jewish-Christian Community of Palestine. The meagre historical content of Matthew's narrative is explained by the apologetic and polemical purpose that dominates it. He selects and uses only such material as is immediately useful for the practical purpose he has in mind, and, in view of this, it is surely unsafe to argue from his silence that he was unacquainted with other traditional incidents which were treasured in the Palestinian circle. And, in fact, there is, we believe, one direct point of contact between the two narratives which suggests that Mt. was not unacquainted with the Hebrew hymns and poetical pieces which are so striking a feature of the Lukan account. The passage in question is the annunciation by an angel to Joseph, set forth in Matt. 20-21—

*Joseph, Son of David, fear not to take to thee Mary thy wife ;
For that which is begotten within her is of the Holy Spirit.
And she shall bring forth a Son,
and thou shalt call His name Jesus :
For it is He that shall save His people from their sins.*

Here, we have an example of synthetic or constructive parallelism of the type of Ps. ii. 6—

Yet have I set my King upon Sion my holy hill.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Mt. is here using and translating from a poetical piece in Hebrew, derived, doubtless, like the hymns in Luke, from the Palestinian Community ; and this conclusion is confirmed by the explanation of the name Jesus, which (as already mentioned) can only be elucidated by a play upon words in Hebrew (not Aramaic).

The significant omission in Luke's account to ascribe to Joseph any part either in the reception or utterance of the "songs," is thus, partially at any rate, compensated for in Mt.

CHAPTER IV

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE (II)

THE episodes described in Luke ii., in connexion with the birth of Jesus, raise many questions, which, in view of the extensive literature¹ that exists on the subject, need not be fully discussed here. Some points, however, which call for remark may be referred to briefly in passing.

(1) The Birth at Bethlehem

The circumstances attending the actual birth of Jesus at Bethlehem are set forth as follows (Luke i. 1-7): Now it came to pass in those days, that a decree went forth from Caesar Augustus that all the world (πᾶσαν τὴν οἰκουμένην) should be enrolled. This was the first enrolment made when Quirinius was Governor of Syria. And all went to enrol themselves, every one to his own city. And Joseph also went up from Galilee out of the city of Nazareth, into Judaea, to the city of David, which is called Bethlehem, because he was of the house and family of David; to enrol himself with Mary, who was betrothed to him, being great with child. And it came to pass, while they were there, the days were fulfilled that she should be delivered. And she brought forth her first-born son; and she wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn.

¹ The most important monograph in English is Ramsay's Vas Christ born in Bethlehem? (1898), to be supplemented by two articles in The Expositor for November and December, 1912 [Luke's narrative of the Birth of Christ], and by the recently published volume The Bearing of Recent Discovery on the Trustworthiness of the New Testament (1915). Knowling's article Birth of Christ in Hastings' D C G, Vol. I (1906), is also important. Sanday judiciously surveys the questions involved in his article Jesus Christ (in Hastings' D B, Vol. II, pp. 645 ff.); and Schürer, G J V 3rd and 4th ed., 1901, pp. 508-43, gives a full discussion, summing up in favour of the radical position, with full notice of the literature; and also Plummer's St. Luke (I C C), ad loc. For the chronology besides Turner's article Chronology in Hastings' D B, see an article by Kirsopp Lake on The date of Herod's marriage with Herodias, and the chronology of the Gospels in The Expositor for November, 1912.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

As is well known, the accuracy of the historical statements here made by St. Luke has been confidently challenged by radical criticism in the past. Such criticism took a very unfavourable view of St. Luke's trustworthiness as a historian, generally. And, in particular, it alleged that in the passage cited above, the writer of the Third Gospel had fallen into a series of colossal blunders. Quirinius was Governor of Syria in A.D. 6, and an enrolment, which provoked great disturbances, was then made, as Josephus attests (Ant. i. 1, ii. 1). As Jesus was born in the reign of Herod the Great, who died in B.C. 4—ten years before the Governorship of Quirinius—St. Luke must have misdated the latter by a considerable number of years. Further, it is urged that, even if held elsewhere, no such enrolment could have taken place in Palestine during the time of Herod, because Palestine was not yet

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

Roman province (as it afterwards became in A.D. 6), and, as Josephus shews (Ant. xv. x. 4; vi. ii. 5; xvii. ii. 1, xi. 2), Herod was free to act independently in matters of taxation. Lastly, such an enrolment would not at any time have necessitated a journey from Nazareth to Bethlehem, nor would it have required the presence of the wife, but only of the husband, at the place of registration. These positions were subjected to strong criticism by Professor Ramsay, in 1898, in his striking book, Was Christ born in Bethlehem? and within the years that have since elapsed, his contentions, and those of other scholars (mainly English), who have helped to vindicate St. Luke, have received strong confirmation, on the whole, from archaeological discovery and research. It was clear from the first that St. Luke, who knew of the later enrolment under Quirinius in A.D. 6 (Acts v. 37), postulates an earlier enrolment, in the reign of Herod, which he carefully distinguishes by applying to it the word "first." The fresh evidence that has come to light, though it does not absolutely prove that such an enrolment as St. Luke attests was actually held, yet makes it probable that one may have taken place in B.C. 10-9 or thereabouts. The editors of the Oxyrhyncus Papyri, Grenfell and Hunt, state the matter as follows—

"Prof. Ramsay is on firm ground when he justifies from the evidence of Egyptian papyri St. Luke's statement that Augustus started, in part at any rate of the Roman world, a series of periodic enrolments in the sense of numberings of the population ; and since the Census which is known to have taken place in Syria in A.D. 6-7 coincides with an enrolment year in Egypt, if we trace back the fourteen year cycle one step beyond . . . , it is primâ facie a very probable hypothesis that the numbering described by St. Luke was consistent with a general census held in B.C. 10-9. Moreover the papyri are quite consistent with St. Luke's statement that this was the first enrolment."¹

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

These deductions are accepted as very probable by the German editors of Papyrus Kunde, Mitteis and Wilcken.² The objection that Augustus would not interfere with Herod's subjects on such a matter is untenable. As Plummer points out,³ Augustus did issue orders about the taxation of the Samaritans after the revolt against Varus, and before Palestine became a Roman province. "If he could do that, he could require information as to taxation throughout Palestine and the obsequious Herod would not attempt to resist."

The purpose of the "first" enrolment was, however, probably not fiscal at all. It was simply

¹ Vol. II, ccliv., pp. 207 ff.

² Vol. I, 192 ff. : "Alle Wahrscheinlichkeit dafür spricht, dass schon Augustus diesen Zensus eingeführt hat, dass dieser Zensus also im J. 10/9 v. Chr., oder 5/6 n. Chr. geschaffen worden ist. Für diese Annahme spricht, dass die Δαογραφία, die die neue Kopfsteuer, deren Zusammenhang mit dem Zensus feststeht, bereits unter Augustus nachweisbar ist." Both passages are cited by Dr. Headlam in the CQR for April, 1915 (p. 183).

³ St. Luke (I C C), p. 49.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

an enumeration of persons by households, and had no direct connexion with taxation, which was normally fixed in accordance with a system of annual returns dealing with the value of property and stock.¹ It is true that the enrolment returns did serve to determine who were liable to the poll-tax—the “tribute” (κῆνσος) of Matt. xxii. 17—which was demanded of all male subjects between the ages of fourteen and sixty. But it is hardly probable that any such use was made of the returns of the “first” enrolment referred to in the passage we are discussing.² “First,” here, no doubt means first of a series, which went on regularly at intervals of fourteen years, as has been pointed out above. It is important to remember that this “first” enrolment must have possessed a peculiar character of its own. It was something new, and, in the case of a subject-kingdom ruled over by a native prince, such as Judaea was in 10–9 B.C., it would, no doubt, be introduced in its simplest and most innocuous form, as a numbering of the population only. The second enrolment, ¹ These annual valuations would normally take place only in the districts directly under Roman control, and presumably they were first systematized in Judaea after A.D. 6.

² No Roman taxes could have been imposed till Judaea became incorporated as a province in the Empire (cf. Schürer, HJP, § 17). Herod imposed heavy taxation, but this was entirely under his own control. The “tribute” of Matt. xxii. 17 was only paid to Rome after A.D. 6. According to Ramsay, women (at the age of 12) paid the poll-tax as well as men (age 14 upwards) in the province of Syria.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

which took place fourteen years later, and coincided with the incorporation into the Empire of Judaea as a province, under the direct rule of a Roman Governor (A.D. 6-7), was accompanied by a valuation of property (for purposes of taxation)—an innovation that led to grave disturbances, which made it long remembered, and invested it with special importance (cf. Acts v. 37).

Another interesting piece of evidence from the papyri makes it clear that people were required to return to their regular places of domicile for the purposes of enrolment. The papyrus in question is dated A.D. 104, "It is a rescript from the Prefect of Egypt requiring all persons who were residing out of their own nomes to return to their homes, in view of the approaching census." The British Museum Editors (Dr. Kenyon and Mr. H. I. Bell)¹ proceed to observe: "The analogy between this order and Luke ii. 1-5 is obvious." No doubt, strict analogy requires that Bethlehem should have been the permanent home of Joseph before the Nativity. And, as Grenfell and Hunt suggest, this may possibly have been the case.²

¹ Papyrus in the British Museum, No. 904, p. 125, 128 ff. The Greek text is as follows: Γαίος Ούίβιος Μάξιμος ἑπαρχὸς Αἰγυπτίου [i.e., Caius Vibius Maximus, Governor of Egypt] λέγει. τῆς κατ' οἰκίαν ἀπογραφῆς ἐνεστῶσης ἀναγκαῖον ἐστὶν πᾶσιν τοῖς καθ' ἡντινα δῆποτε αἰτίαν ἀποδημοῦσιν ἀπὸ τῶν νομῶν προσαγγέλλεσθαι ἐπανελθεῖν εἰς τὰ ἑαυτῶν ἐφέστια, ἵνα καὶ τὴν συνήθη οἰκονομίαν τῆς ἀπογραφῆς πληρώσωσιν καὶ τῇ προσηκούσῃ αὐτοῖς γεωργίᾳ προσκαρτερήσωσιν.

² "If, without rejecting the first chapter of St. Luke, the account of the Census could be combined with St. Matthew's record of the Nativity, from which the natural

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

St. Matthew's narrative, which represents the point of view of Joseph, does certainly seem to imply that Bethlehem was the home of the latter, before the Nativity. Joseph and his family, according to this account, only migrate to Nazareth later (Matt. ii. 22 f.). Combining the two accounts of St. Matthew and St. Luke, which, as has been argued in previous chapters, undoubtedly reflect older tradition current in early Jewish-Christian Palestinian circles, and which supplement each other, we may infer that Nazareth was the original home of Mary, and Bethlehem of Joseph; that at the time when the edict was issued Joseph was absent (perhaps only temporarily) from Bethlehem, in Nazareth, the home of his affianced wife; and that, in consequence of the edict, he found it necessary to return to Bethlehem. It may be suggested that, unless he wished to repudiate Mary in the condition in which she then was, he was obliged to take her under his protection as his wife (i.e., according to Oriental custom, to make the marriage complete)¹; it thus became necessary for Mary to accompany him. For some reason—many can be thought of—Joseph's home in Bethlehem was not available on their arrival, and the birth took place in the circumstances described in Luke ii. It may be inferred that, though they ultimately inference is that, before the Nativity, Bethlehem, not Nazareth, was the permanent home of Joseph, all the difficulty about the exceptional character of the Census could be removed." Grenfell & Hunt (op. cit., p. 212).

¹ See Appendix II.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

returned to Nazareth "their own city" (Luke ii. 39) their stay in Bethlehem was prolonged for some little time, sufficient in fact to allow for the events recorded in Luke ii. 22-38. Possibly Joseph already had in mind to make his home in his wife's native place, Nazareth, before the journey back to Bethlehem. If so, however, the circumstances attending his marriage to Mary would have made a change of plan natural, not to say necessary.

To avoid scandal, it was imperative that husband and wife should, for a time at any rate, find a home elsewhere. Under such circumstances, Joseph may well have determined to return to his native-place, Bethlehem, and resume his home-life there, with Mary as his wife. He may, possibly, have possessed there a small property—a house with some land—which, after an absence lasting at least some months, may not have been available immediately on their arrival. Hence, resort to the "inn" or Khan, the crowded condition of which will be explained if we can assume that the time of year coincided with the flocking of the pilgrims to Jerusalem to attend one of the great feasts.¹ The crowded condition of the Khan is, perhaps, read into the narrative, as Spitta² points out. The usual view that the "Khan" was full of persons who had arrived in ¹ This, of course, is purely hypothetical. The time of year at which the Nativity took place is quite uncertain. There is little, if any, reason to suppose that it coincides with the traditional date, 25th December. It may well have been in the Spring.

² Z N T W, 1906 (Siebenter Jahrgang, Heft 4), p. 298 f.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

Bethlehem for enrolment is a fantastic one. It is not probable that there was any great movement of population throughout Palestine in consequence of the enrolment. The normal procedure would be to enrol in one's own district. We have already suggested above that Joseph may have had some small property in Bethlehem, and this view is regarded by Spitta as by no means improbable. If that were the case, it would be a natural thing for him to enrol himself there, in accordance with the rule which is expressed by the Roman jurist Ulpian¹ (beg. of 3rd cent.). Is vero qui agrum in alia civitate habet, in ea civitate profiteri debet, in qua ager est; agri enim tributum in eam civitatem debet levare, in cuius territorio possidetur.

Spitta, however, denies that there is any question of a "Khan," or "inn," in the narrative at all. By the κατάλυμα of Luke ii. 5, he understands a building where they had found lodging; and St. Luke's statement means, that because there was no other place available in this abode, they laid the child in the manger,² i.e., the manger was in the κατάλυμα—and there was no other suitable spot within it where they could lay the child. There is no question of the manger being outside. All that κατάλυμα implies "is a place where burdens are loosed and let down for a rest."³ The narrator, Spitta thinks, conceived it as a sort of shed, used

¹ Cited by Schürer, GVI, i. 514.

² "The animals were out at pasture, and the manger was not being used." (Plummer.)

³ Plummer, ad loc. (St. Luke ICC).

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

for the animals who were at the time out at pasture (and so the manger was free). It would be a spot familiar to the shepherds. But why may not the κατάλυμα have been a cave, used for this purpose by the shepherds, and containing a manger? In the Test. of Job, Ch. xl., it is related of Job's wife that she "departed into the city and entered a certain cattle-fold, and slept near a manger."¹

Thus, if the reconstruction of events just sketched be accepted, it may be assumed that it was Joseph's intention to make his home once more permanently in Bethlehem. Not improbably this intention was partially carried out. The Holy Family may well have remained in Bethlehem, as the First Gospel suggests, for a considerable time, perhaps at least a year. Then the events occurred which made it expedient to remove the young child outside the pale of Herod's jurisdiction.

That the circle to which Joseph, a descendant of the House of David, belonged looked upon the circumstances accompanying the birth of a son to him as in some degree extraordinary, is very clearly reflected in both Nativity-Narratives. That Messianic expectations should have been excited in such circles by the event is by no means extraordinary. If these hopes, by some means, became known to Herod, Bethlehem would clearly be no safe place as the permanent home of the young child. According to St. Matthew, Herod's suspicions were first aroused by the inquiries of the Magi, whose visit to Bethlehem may not have taken place for some months after the birth. It thus became necessary to seek a new home for the young child. Ultimately, as we know, this was found in Nazareth, Mary's city." St. Luke's account certainly, at first sight, seems to imply that the migration from Bethlehem back to Nazareth took place a short time after the birth, viz., "When they had accomplished all things that were according to the law of the Lord" (Mt. ii. 39)—i.e., the circumcision and presentation in the Temple. In the First Gospel, however, as is well known, a longer interval is desiderated, sufficient, in fact, to bridge the years that elapsed before Herod's death in 4 B.C. During this period, we are told, Joseph and his family took refuge in Egypt, and only returned to Galilee and Nazareth on the accession of Archelaus to the Tetrarchy of Judaea (4 B.C.). The motive suggested for the journey to Egypt is adequate, as well as the reason given for delay in returning. It is quite in accordance with Herod's character that he should have taken measures of the kind described in Mt. ii. 16 f., to blight any hopes that may have been formed in connexion with the birth of a child to a Davidic family—however obscure—in Bethlehem, if he had, by some means or other, come to know of these hopes. But why, it may be asked, did not Joseph return at once with his family to Galilee? The answer is obvious. Galilee was part of Herod's dominions, and remained so till his death. Only at Herod's death was it made into a separate

¹ καὶ ἀπελθοῦσα εἰς τὴν πόλιν εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὴν ἐπαύλην τῶν βοῶν αὐτῆς τῶν ἀρπασθέντων ὑπὸ τῶν ἀρχόντων οἷς ἐδούλευεν. καὶ περὶ τινὰ φάτην ἐκοιμήθη. (Texts and Studies, V, i., p. 129.)

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Tetrarchy. Thus, the story given in the First Gospel accords with the facts. Galilee and Nazareth only became a safe refuge after the break up of the Herodian dominions in 4 B.C. If the birth is placed in 9 B.C., the interval will amount to five years. Though St. Luke apparently has no knowledge of a sojourn in Egypt before the migration to Galilee, his language, which is studiously vague,¹ does not preclude the possibility of such an episode in the early life of Jesus.

When the general character of the narratives is taken into consideration—their independence, as well as their strict sobriety and restraint—the fact that they are mutually complementary is of impressive significance. The misplaced ingenuity often shown by harmonists in the past in attempts to dovetail together incidents in the Gospel narratives, on the basis of purely arbitrary reconstruction, have rightly been reprobated by sober critical scholarship. But, in the problem we are considering, such an attempt is justified. The narratives are admittedly fragmentary in character; they are written from two points of view which reflect ¹ ii. 39: And when they had accomplished all things that were according to the law of the Lord—this is a summary statement of a generalizing character; cf. the next verse (ii. 40): And the child grew and waxed strong, etc., which obviously covers a period of some years' duration.

St. Luke's habit of passing over a long period of time in a few summary phrases might well be illustrated from the Acts; scholars are not agreed yet as to whether the events recorded in Acts i.–vi. occupied five (or six) years, or only a few months.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

the positions of Joseph and Mary. Their mutually complementary character, which is obviously undesignated, thus becomes one more evidence of their essential historicity, and we are justified in treating them as parts of a single whole, especially as the process of adjustment does not involve any questions of minute detail. Thus, the first and most famous harmonist of the Gospels, Tatian, in the Diatessaron, has combined the two Gospel accounts in a way which appears to possess the merit both of simplicity and verisimilitude. He arranges the incidents in the following order—

1. The Birth at Bethlehem.
2. Removal from the stable to a house.
3. The presentation in the Temple and recognition by Simeon and Anna (forty days after the birth).
4. Return from Jerusalem to Bethlehem.
5. About a year later, the Visit of the Magi to Bethlehem, and the appearance of the Star.
6. The Flight into Egypt, the result of a divine warning.
7. The Massacre of the Innocents at Bethlehem after the flight of the Holy Family.
8. The Holy Family returns to Bethlehem, perhaps with the intention of settling there permanently, but, warned once again, goes back to Nazareth.

About this reconstruction there is nothing arbitrary; it clearly demonstrates that no essential antagonism exists between the two narratives.

To return, after this digression, to Luke ii. 1-5,

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

we have still to refer to the difficult questions concerning the Governorship of Quirinius and the chronology. Did Quirinius govern Syria before A.D. 6-7? It is now widely recognized that this was, in fact, the case. Thus, Mommsen accepts the earlier Governorship, though he dates it 3-2 B.C. This date would not, of course, harmonize either with the Census or the reign of Herod. Sir William Ramsay, however, has been able to produce some new and important evidence, discovered by himself, which suggests that Quirinius was governing Syria in the years 10-7 B.C. This evidence is contained in an inscription found on the site of the ancient Antioch, in Asia Minor, which mentions Quirinius by name as duumvir—

“Quirinius was elected chief magistrate (duumvir) of the Colony Antioch; and he nominated Caristianus as his prefectus to act for him. This sort of honorary magistracy was often offered to the reigning Emperor by coloniae; but in such cases the Emperor was elected alone without a colleague. Under the earlier Emperors, and especially under Augustus, the same compliment was sometimes paid to other distinguished Romans, chiefly members of the Imperial family. Exceptional cases occur in which the field of choice was wider. This inscription is the most complete example of the wider choice: it mentions two such cases: both Quirinius and Servilius were elected in this way.”¹

¹ Ramsay in Expositor (Nov., 1912, p. 402). The text of the inscription is given on p. 401.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

Why was Quirinius, a man of humble origin, selected for so high a dignity? There must have been some special reason. Ramsay explains this as follows—

“He had neither Imperial connexion nor outstanding reputation to commend him to the Antiochian coloni. But everything is clear when we remember that he conducted the war against the Homonades. Antioch was a fortress intended to restrain the depredations of the mountain tribes; and the Homonades must have been a constant danger to the country which it was Antioch's duty to protect. It was at that time that they elected Quirinius a duumvir.”¹

Ramsay shews that any year about 9 to 7 B.C. would be suitable for the duumvirate of Quirinius, and that Quirinius probably came to Syria in the summer of 11 B.C., “immediately after his consulship,” in order to prepare for the campaign against the Homonades, which could not well begin before the beginning of the following year. His command, which was essentially of a military character, lasted, according to Ramsay, from 11 to 8 B.C., “possibly even a year longer”; and that of Saturninus from 9 to 6 B.C.

“As Quirinius was much occupied per Ciliciam (Cilicia was at that time attached to the province of Syria), Saturninus was sent to administer the domestic affairs of Syria and Palestine, as Josephus shews.”²

¹ Ibid., p. 403.

² Ibid., p. 405.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

It is well known that Tertullian (adv. Marc. iv. 19) states that Jesus was born when Saturninus was Governor, i.e., between the years 9 and 6 B.C. Ramsay would harmonize the two apparently conflicting data by the hypothesis that both Quirinius and Saturninus were governing Syria at the same time, but each administering a different department of affairs, one military, the other civil. He thinks "the enrolment must have been to some extent under his (Saturninus's) charge (and so Tertullian is justified); but Quirinius was in military command, and household enrolments had to the Romans rather a military connexion (and so St. Luke also is justified)." ¹

Ramsay has not proved these contentions; but he has made out a case for them. Some, however, may prefer to suppose that a change of Governors took place during the Census-year, in which case it would be equally true to say that the Census took place "while Quirinius was Governor," or "while Saturninus was Governor." Or, it may be suggested that St. Luke, while right on the whole, has yet made a mistake as to the Governor's name. ² What may safely be dismissed is the view, which has been made quite untenable by the most recent discussion and research, that St. Luke's statements as to the early enrolment, and its connexion with Our Lord's birth at Bethlehem in Herod's reign,

¹ Ibid., p. 406.

² This is Mr. C. H. Turner's view (art. Chronology, Hastings' D B).

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

are entirely baseless ; are, indeed, pure fiction, the product of a series of colossal historical blunders.

(2) The Annunciation to the Shepherds (Luke ii. 8-20)

The angelic communication of the Messiah's birth to the shepherds is made, as was the annunciation to the Virgin-Mother, to the accompaniment of a theophany. Such theophanies, as Dr. Briggs points out,¹ "are frequently mentioned in the story of the Exodus." In a blaze of heavenly light, an angel of the Lord is seen, who announces the birth of the Messiah—

And the angel said unto them :

Be not afraid !

For behold I bring you good tidings of great joy,

Which shall be to all the people :

For to-day there is born unto you a Saviour,²

Who is the Messiah-Lord³ in the city of David :

*And let this be⁴
unto you the sign :*

*Ye shall find a babe wrapped in swaddling-clothes
And lying in a manger. (Luke ii. 10-12.)*

¹ Messiah of the Gospels, p. 51 : cf. Ex. xvi. 10, xxiv. 16-17 ; Lev. ix. 23 ; Num. xiv. 10, xvi. 19.

² Heb. Môshîâ—cf. Yeshûâ : "Jesus."

³ χριστός κύριος : cf. Psalms of Solomon, xvii. 4 ; also Acts xi. 36 (κύριον καὶ χριστόν).

⁴ Adding ἔστω (after σημεῖον) with codex D.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

The angelic song is followed immediately by "a refrain in two lines sung by a heavenly choir":

Glory in the highest (heaven)
to God,
And on earth peace
*Among men in whom He is well-pleased.*¹
(Luke ii. 14.)

The first thing to notice about this piece is, that, like other pieces embodied in the Lukan Nativity-Narrative, it is poetical both in structure and character. The Greek, when translated back into Hebrew, forms a series of 7 + 2 long lines, marked by characteristic rhythm and parallelism. The parallelism is most perfect in the refrain, where heaven and earth, glory and peace, God and men well-pleasing to God, balance each other.

And, secondly, it is thoroughly Jewish-Christian, both in thought and outlook. The spirit that pervades it is that of Old Testament Messianic at its highest. The Messiah who is born, not in David's palace, but in a manger in David's city, is Lord in accordance with the Messianic conception expressed in Ps. cx. 1-2.²

He is also Saviour (i.e., the Messianic King, Son

¹ Lit. among men of his good pleasure (or favour): Heb., be anshê reṣônô. Dr. Briggs (ibid.) well points out that εὐδόκία = Heb. rāṣôn, "acceptance with God"; cf. the heavenly voice at the Baptism: Thou art my beloved Son: in thee I am well pleased (εὐδόκησα). (Luke iii. 22.)

² The Messianic interpretation of this Psalm was the accepted one generally just before and after Christ.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

and Heir of David), who will “save” His people from their sins, and inaugurate the reign of Peace throughout the world, in accordance with the ancient prophetic view. The Messianic King will be “Prince of Peace.” (Is. ix. 6.)

*I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim,
And the horse from Jerusalem,
And the battle bow shall be cut off ;
And he will speak peace to the nations :
And his rule shall be from sea to sea ;
And from the river unto the ends of the earth.*

(Zech. ix. 10.)

But, as Dr. Briggs suggests, it is no doubt the well-known prophecy of Micah, which is expressly cited in a similar connexion in Matt. ii. 6, that is implicitly referred to in the passage we are considering—

*And thou, Bethlehem Ephrathah,
The least among the clans of Judah,
Out of thee shall come forth for me,
One who is to be ruler in Israel ;
Whose goings forth are from of old, from ancient days.*

*And he will stand and be shepherd in the strength of Jahveh,
In the majesty of the name of Jahveh his God !
And they shall abide ; for now he will become great Unto the ends of the earth.
And this one shall be peace. (Micah v. 2, 4.)*

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

The Peace which He ushers in is contemplated by the angels as resting in "the (redeemed) race itself in virtue of His (the Redeemer's) birth."

The poem, with its prose setting, is Jewish-Christian through and through, and is doubtless a product of the primitive tradition to which the other poetical pieces that are so characteristic a feature of the Lukan narrative, belong. The assertion of Soltau that "no Jewish-Christian would really have understood the idea that the birth of the Messiah heralded the dawn of a reign of peace for the whole world and of happiness for all mankind,"¹ can only be characterized as an extraordinary example of critical perversity. We are asked to believe that the true origin of the angelic hymn is to be found in heathen laudatory inscriptions, giving directions as to the celebration of the birthday of Augustus, in which "Augustus is glorified as saviour (σωτήρ) of the whole human race, as one in whom Providence (πρόνοια) has not only fulfilled, but even surpassed the wish of all men." "For peace prevails upon earth, harmony and order reign. Men are filled with the best hopes for the future, with joyful courage for the present." Soltau proceeds—

"We see here that the rejoicings at the birth of Augustus found expression in the same way as, we are told in Luke ii. 10 f., the joy of Jesus' birth did. This and similar descriptions of the happiness of the world after the appearance of Augustus cannot, therefore, have been unknown to the Evangelist when he wrote the words found in Luke ii. 8-20. The writer transferred them to the times when his Saviour was born.”¹

¹ Birth of Jesus Christ (E.T.), p. 34.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

If anything is certain, as our previous discussion has shewn, it is that this and other similar sections of the Lukan narrative are Jewish-Christian throughout. It is sufficient to say that Soltau's position, as he himself admits, “excludes the idea that the form (assumed by the pieces in question) was due to Jewish-Christians.” He is sure they are “not of Palestinian origin”!

Much greater insight and feeling for the genius of the narrative are displayed by Gressmann in his interesting essay on the section of St. Luke we are discussing.² Though he strongly maintains the view that the story of the Birth at Bethlehem³ is pure legend, and cannot be regarded as falling within the domain of sober history, he is equally emphatic in affirming its Jewish-Christian character. The legend is old, and not to be regarded as the creation of the Evangelist, but as derived from popular tradition. Its form is thoroughly Jewish. Even such expressions as “bring good tidings” (εὐαγγελίζεσθαι), and “Saviour” (σωτήρ), which must be regarded as

¹ Op. cit., p. 35.

² Das Weihnachts-Evangelium (1914).

³ As also the Flight into Egypt, the circumcision and presentation in the Temple, the visit to Jerusalem. These form “a legendary cycle (‘sagenkranz’) which has been woven round the infancy and youth of Jesus.”

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

termini technici of the Hellenistic thought-world, have points of contact in the Old Testament, and may quite easily have become naturalized in genuinely Jewish circles in the time of Christ. The only un-Jewish expression that Gressmann detects is "Messiah-Lord" (χριστὸς κύριος) for which a Jew would have written "the Lord's Messiah" (χριστὸς κυρίου). Possibly the expression is due to mistranslation.¹

Gressmann endeavours to avoid the difficulties that beset the hypothesis of late legendary growth by assuming that the legendary development in relation to the early life of Jesus took place quite early, and was already complete before the literary activity of the Evangelists began. It grew up as an oral tradition in the circles of the people. It is the reflex on the popular mind of the immense impression made by the personality of Jesus. After subjecting this section of the Third Gospel (Luke ii. 1-20) to a minute and searching analysis, Gressmann concludes that, behind the present form of the text, an older form of the alleged legend can be detected. In the process of criticizing the narrative as it stands, he makes the most of the historical difficulties about the Census and the Governorship of Quirinius which we have already discussed. He also points out that what seem to be inconsistencies in the narrative, are, he thinks, incompatible with its historicity. These need not detain us now. What is most important in the monograph is the constructive part, where the author attempts to reconstruct the original form of the "legend," and discusses its origin and history (pp. 17 ff.). A legend must possess a motif. The most hopeful way of discovering this is by analysis and the use of the comparative method. In its original form, the Lukan birth-legend is an example of a "foundling-story," of which there are several applied to the birth of great heroes (Romulus, Cyrus, etc.).¹ The hero is envisaged as a mystery-child, springing from the unknown, having no visible connexion with earthly parents. In the original form of the birth-legend of Luke ii. 8 ff., Joseph and Mary were absent. The shepherds simply discover the foundling in the manger. But what was the significance of the manger? It is presupposed that the spot where the child was found must have been a well-known one, a locality with associations that would mark it out as the scene of a wonderful event. Now, it is a well-attested fact that early in the second century a cave in the neighbourhood of Bethlehem, in the open country, and not in the town itself, was pointed out as the scene of the Nativity. Justin Martyr (Trypho lxxviii.) says —

¹ This may be true.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

The child was born at Bethlehem, and Joseph, because he could find no place in the town where to lodge, went into a certain cave near the town. And ¹ Also in the O.T. Exodus ii. (Moses in the Nile) and Ezekiel xvi.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

*while they were there, Mary brought forth Christ, and laid him in a manger, where he was found by the wise men that came from Arabia.*¹

From the fact that no mention of a cave is made in the Lukan account, while an early local tradition persistently identified the scene of the Nativity with a cave in the neighbourhood of Bethlehem, Gressmann concludes that the cave in question was a marked spot, with special associations, before the "legend" of Christ's Nativity was attached to it. The later association of the birth-legend was made easy by the identification of the manger and cave. Cave-stables are fairly common in Palestine. Conder² says: "Such stables I have planned and measured at Tekoa, Aziz, and other places south of Bethlehem, and the mangers existing in them leave no doubt as to their use and character." Such a cave-manger, in the open country, away from the town, suits the original "legend." Gressmann proceeds—

"It is true there were also mangers in the Khans . . . but that the cave must be preferred as the scene of (the legend embedded in) the Christmas Gospel admits of no doubt. The inn is situated in the town, while the cave is outside ;

¹ Cf. also the Protev. Jacobi. xviii. with xvii. end. (And he took her down from the ass, and said to her : "Whither shall I take thee ? . . . for the place is desolate." And he found a cave there, and took her in . . . and he went out and sought a midwife in the country of Bethlehem.) Epiphanius and Jerome also mention the cave.

² Tent Work in Palestine, p. 145.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

the former must have been far removed from the scene of the (angelic) annunciation, while the latter can be conceived of as in the immediate neighbourhood. Above all, however, the logic of the legend demands that the child should have been found not in the midst of (a busy throng of) men, but in solitude in some mysterious spot.

“These considerations confirm the conclusion that the birth-legend was already in existence before it was transferred, in a modified form, to Jesus; the original legend was associated with the cave of Bethlehem, in the manger of which, as everyone was aware, the foundling had lain.”¹

Such legends were especially associated with kings, or men who had raised themselves, by their own successful efforts, to the position of kings; from foundling to world-king.

“It may therefore be conjectured that the story which attached itself to the childhood of Jesus was originally the birth-legend of a royal child (Königskindes). This is confirmed by a second reason. If in the pre-Christian period a legend was current in Bethlehem, which dealt with the birth of a child, it would inevitably attach itself to the (person of the) Messiah, who as the future King of the Jews must inevitably be born in the City of David. . . . When Jesus became Christ and his birth was transferred from

¹ Gressmann, op. cit., p. 19.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Nazareth to Bethlehem, the Jewish-Christians of Bethlehem (or Judaea) honoured him by transferring to him the birth-legend of the Messiah which was already current among them.”¹

Gressmann is of opinion that this type of legend was imported from outside into Jewish circles. But it had already been assimilated, and had assumed a Jewish form in the pre-Christian period.

It must be conceded that Gressmann has erected his critical edifice with great care, and has shown much skill and not a little insight in strengthening it against such assaults as have proved fatal to previous structures of the same kind. Will the new edifice sustain the test of a searching criticism? Gressmann sees clearly enough that the narrative in its present form is Jewish-Christian in character. He guards himself against falling into the absurdities of a Soltau. But, in order to be able to deal with the episode as a transformed legend, he is obliged to cut off the introductory historical matter (Luke ii. 1-8) as something essentially foreign to what follows. The statements about Quirinius and the Census, and the journey of Joseph and Mary to Bethlehem have nothing legendary about them. They are either pure fact or fiction. Gressmann is obliged to treat them as definitely unhistorical, and as due either to the inventive genius or to the blundering of St. Luke. Either of these explanations is involved in considerable difficulties. It is incredible that St. Luke can have deliberately invented such a series of definite and categorical statements, and we have already seen that some of the main supports, on which the case for convicting St. Luke of gross blundering depends, have been swept away by recent investigation and research. It has become increasingly difficult to maintain the view that the historical statements in Luke ii. 1 ff., are without foundation in fact.

¹ Ibid., p. 19 f.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

Another difficulty confronts Gressmann's hypothesis. The central part of the section which he regards as embodying the transformed "legend" contains a good deal of poetical matter, which, as we have seen, is essentially Hebrew in character. In fact, these pieces (Luke ii. 10-12 and 14) may confidently be regarded as translations of Hebrew poems. They are of exactly the same character as the poetical pieces which are so striking a feature in Luke i. The presumption, therefore, is that they belong to the same body of Jewish-Christian tradition. If the pieces in Luke ii. 9 ff., are legendary, so are those in Luke i. The whole series must be regarded as the outcome of pious imagination. We have already seen in a former chapter what insuperable difficulties are involved in this hypothesis. How can such a "legend" as the story of the Virgin Birth have grown up in so strictly Jewish a circle? Moreover, the narrative as a whole—the entire Jewish-Christian tradition embodied in these chapters—is invested with an air of sobriety and restraint, is characterized by a delicacy and refinement, that are hard to reconcile with the legendary atmosphere. There is undoubtedly a large element of poetry in them; and we must allow for the presence of the idealizing tendency native to a poetical presentment. But the poems, as has been already pointed out, are built up on a solid basis of fact, or what the writers had the best reasons for believing to be fact. Apart from such a basis, their growth and acceptance in such a primitive Jewish-Christian circle cannot be explained.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

The whole legendary hypothesis is involved in great difficulties on the question of time. Legends require time for growth and development. Gressmann's particular form of hypothesis is involved in this difficulty. He says—

“When Jesus became Christ (i.e., presumably, some time after the Resurrection) and his birth was transferred from Nazareth to Bethlehem, the Jewish-Christians of Bethlehem (or Judaea) honoured him by transferring to him the birth-legend of the Messiah which was already current among them.”

The assumptions underlying this statement are worth a close examination. It is assumed that at a comparatively early period, say between the years A.D. 30 and 40, the story grew up that the Christian Messiah—whose real birthplace was Nazareth—had been born at Bethlehem. Who were the Jewish-Christians of Bethlehem? We do not hear of them in the Gospels or the Acts. Yet they must have been an exceedingly influential body in the early

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

Palestinian Church if they were able to win acceptance for such a story, especially at a time when members of the family of Jesus were still alive. Why do we never hear of this story in the Jewish-Christian chapters of the Acts? Ex hypothesi these Jewish-Christians wished to "honour" Jesus by transferring to Him the birth-legend of the Messiah which was already current among them. There was, therefore, no motive for keeping the story secret. If it grew up in the way supposed, it could not possibly have been kept secret, but must have owed its success and ultimate incorporation into the canonical Gospel-Narrative to its wide acceptance at an early date. In view of such a development, the silence of the other New Testament Books is inexplicable. On the other hand, this silence is explained if we suppose that the narrative is founded on facts, which were not published at first, but treasured for a considerable time within a limited circle closely connected with the family of Jesus. Gressmann assumes, also, that a legend concerning the birth of the Messiah was current at Bethlehem in the pre-Christian period. It is an essential feature of this "legend" that the mysterious child should have been depicted as a foundling, who was discovered in a well-known cave in the neighbourhood of Bethlehem. What is the connexion of this legend with that of the Virgin Birth? The two are quite distinct things. If Gressmann's hypothesis is correct, we must assume that two totally distinct legends had grown up respecting the birth of the Messiah in pre-Christian Jewish circles. According to one story, he is pictured as appearing on the scene as a foundling, whose parents are unknown; according to the other, as born of a Virgin.¹ And both stories found their way, in a modified form, into Jewish-Christian circles later.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

In the present form of the Gospel-Narrative the foundling-story has been assimilated to that of the Virgin Birth. How was that accomplished? Are we to suppose that the two stories originally existed side-by-side in Bethlehem? Or did the story of the Virgin Birth grow up in Jewish circles elsewhere? It is difficult to believe that such was the case, because both the obviously independent accounts of the Virgin Birth, contained in the First and Third Gospels, converge upon Bethlehem. In this case, on Gressmann's hypothesis, there must have been two stories current in pre-Christian Jewish circles, both closely connected with Bethlehem and the birth of the Messiah there, which were entirely divergent in detail and governed by different motifs. If such stories ever had been current, they must have left some trace in Jewish literature. As has been pointed out in a previous chapter, there is not the slightest indication in early Rabbinical literature of the existence of a popular belief that the Messiah would be born of a Virgin.

¹ Gunkel, who is the founder of the school to which Gressmann belongs, assumes that a story had grown up among pre-Christian Jews that the Messiah would be born of a Virgin. But for this there is not the slightest positive evidence of any value. See Additional Notes (2), p. 218.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

Let us see what Jewish evidence, if any, can be adduced in favour of the foundling-story in connection with the Messiah's birth. There is a well-known story, that deserves study in this connexion, which is preserved in the Palestinian Talmud (Berakhoth ii. 5 a.) and in the Midrash (on Lamentation i. 16); it is cited by Lightfoot in Horae Hebraicae on Matthew ii. 1, but may be repeated here¹—

It happened once that a certain Jew was ploughing. A certain Arabian passed by, and his oxen bellowed. He (the Arabian) said: "O Jew, Jew, loose thy oxen, and loose thy ploughs, for your temple is laid waste." While they bargained, the oxen bellowed a second time. He (the Arabian) said to him, "O Jew, Jew, yoke thy oxen and fit thy ploughs because your Messiah is born!" He (the Jew) said to him, "Where is he born?" He answered, "In Bethlehem-Judah." He said to him, "What is his name?" He answered, "His name is Menahem." "And whose son is he?" He answered, "Hezekiah's." He thereupon sold his oxen and ploughs, and became a seller of swaddling clothes for children, and went about from town to town until he reached Bethlehem-Judah. When he came to Bethlehem-Judah all the women there thronged to him, and he sought to sell swaddling clothes for their children. He asked, "Which of you is the mother of Menahem?" They said unto him, "This one." And all the women bought swaddling clothes for their children, but she did not buy. He said to her, "Why dost thou not buy swaddling clothes for Menahem, thy son?" She answered, "Because he had an evil omen, for on the day he was born the Sanctuary was laid waste." He replied, "But we hoped that as it was laid waste at his feet, so it would be built again at his feet." "Take now," said he to her "swaddling clothes, and if thou hast no money, I will make it a debt." After some time he passed through that district (again) and said to her, "I will not go until I see how Menahem is." She replied, "Did I not at the time when thou camest hither say to thee that he had an evil omen—yea! his omen was indeed evil upon him! There came upon him Spirits (or winds) and whirlwinds and snatched him away out of my hands, and I know not where they have put him."

¹ The Aramaic Text can be seen in Dalman's Aramaische Dialekt-Proben (1896), p. 14 f.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Menahem (i.e., "Comforter") is simply a symbolical name of the Messiah. The representation of him as a son of Hezekiah is an echo of an older exegesis of Isaiah's Messianic prophecies, which identified the promised Child Immanuel with Hezekiah himself.¹ In the extract from the Midrash given above, the ideas present are: (1) Messiah is already born (He is the son of Hezekiah); (2) He disappears mysteriously soon after the birth, the implication being that He will be revealed suddenly later. Exactly the same ideas are attested as present in the popular conception of the Messiah

¹ See: Klausner Messianischen Vorstellungen (1904), p. 69.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

in the Fourth Gospel; cf. John vii. 42 (Hath not the Scriptures said that the Christ cometh of the seed of David, and from Bethlehem, the village where David was?) and ch. vii. 27 (When the Christ cometh no man knoweth whence he is). These two apparently irreconcilable statements mean that the Messiah was to be born at Bethlehem and then mysteriously to disappear for a time, only to reappear suddenly later. Thus, these ideas were firmly entrenched in the popular mind already in the time of Christ. Justin Martyr (Trypho viii.), cites Trypho as giving expression to the same conception—

But Christ, if he is come, and is anywhere, is unknown, nor does he know himself, nor can he be endued with any power, till Elias shall come and anoint him, and make him manifest to all men.

In the Babylonian Talmud¹ Rabbi Joshua ben Levi is quoted as saying that the Messiah is already born and is living in concealment at the gates of Rome; and in the Jerusalem Targum to Micah iv. 8, the Messiah is represented as being on the earth, but because of the sins of the people he is still in concealment.²

From a survey of this evidence, it will be seen how very improbable it is that any story which represented the Messianic Child as a foundling or a deserted waif could have grown up in Jewish circles in the centuries immediately before Christ. The tradition that the Messiah was to be born of the seed of David in Bethlehem was too strong to allow of any such development. How, then, is the story of the cave near Bethlehem being the scene of the Nativity to be accounted for? The fact that caves were often used as mangers in the country district around Bethlehem might facilitate the identification, and, perhaps, even give it some claims to be considered authentic. No special interest in the site of the manger is manifested in the Gospel accounts. The fixing of the site in so particular a manner by Justin and the Protevangelium Jacobi implies a later point of view when the passion for defining such had to be gratified. By the time when interest had grown up, the actual event had receded into a distant past. No doubt the κατάλυμα ("inn"), if it were a building of any sort, had long disappeared, and other local changes had taken place. Probably the tradition did not emerge till after the break up of the country's life brought about by the Roman war (A.D. 66-70). That a strong local tradition then arose which fixed the scene of the Nativity in a cave is significant in view of the widespread cave-cultus that developed in the early Christian centuries in Palestine. As Stanley remarks,¹ "it is hardly too much to say that, as far as sacred conditions are concerned," the religion of Palestine became "a religion of caves."

¹ Sanhedrin, 98 b.

² See, further, J E., art. Messiah, Vol. VIII, p. 511.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

¹ Sinai and Palestine, Ch. II (p. 121 in the one-volume ed. of 1910).

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

“ First in antiquity is the grotto of Bethlehem, already in the second century regarded by popular belief as the scene of the Nativity. Next comes the grotto on Mount Olivet, selected as the scene of our Lord’s last conversations before the Ascension. These two caves, as Eusebius emphatically asserts, were the first seats of the worship established by the Empress Helena (? circa A.D. 326–328), to which was shortly after added a third, the sacred cave of the Sepulchre. To these were rapidly added the cave of the Invention of the Cross, the cave of the Annunciation at Nazareth, the cave of the Agony at Gethsemane, the cave of the Baptist in the wilderness of St. John, the cave of the shepherds of Bethlehem.”

The fact that the Emperor Hadrian thought it worth while to devastate Bethlehem and plant upon it a grove sacred to Adonis¹ (Jerome, Ep. ad Paul, lviii. 3) shews that before A.D. 132 Bethlehem was the scene of Christian pilgrimage and worship. Thus, the conditions were present comparatively early which would make it necessary to gratify the demand for a definite site ; and in response to this, one of the cave-stables which were common in the district may have been fixed upon ; or a cult motive, such as often operated in later times may have been at work, and a cave-site selected which ¹ He also set up an image of Jupiter and an image of Venus on the sites of the Crucifixion and the Resurrection. See E B (s. v. Bethlehem), col. 561.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

possessed earlier religious associations that were suppressed and displaced by the new cultus.¹

It is noteworthy that Justin Martyr (c. A.D. 150) connects the cave with a passage in the O.T. (Is. xxxiii. 16, lxx.) : He shall dwell in a lofty cavern of a strong rock (οὗτος οἰκήσει ἐν ὑψηλῷ σπηλαίῳ πέτρας ὀχυρᾶς). Plummer (St. Luke, p. 54), suggests "that the cave may be a supposed prophecy turned into history"; but it seems more likely that the citation from Scripture was intended to justify an antecedent belief. Some scholars think the tradition of a cave as the scene of the Nativity is authentic. Because there was no room for the Holy Family in the Khan, they retired "to a stall or cave where there was room for the mother and a crib for the babe." This opinion is supported by the high authority of Professor G. A. Smith (E B, col. 561), who, however, does not believe that the Grotto of the Nativity, which forms the most sacred feature of the present Church of the Nativity at Bethlehem, marks the actual site: "It is only probable," he says, "that Jesus was born in a cave, and there is nothing to prove that this was the cave, for the site lay desolate for three centuries." It is curious that Bethlehem is not mentioned by Josephus after Solomon's time, nor in the Books of Maccabees. It apparently was only an insignificant village in the first century A.D. As we have seen, Christian influence had become strong there, possibly as early as the last quarter of the first century A.D., and (as at Nazareth), has remained predominant ever since. When it became a place of Christian pilgrimage, it naturally grew in importance; and at the present time it has a population of about 8,000 (mainly Christian).

¹ One naturally thinks of the caves associated with Mithraic worship in this connexion mentioned by Justin (Trypho LXXVIII).

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

Looking at the narrative contained in Luke ii. 8-20 as a whole, we may claim that it embodies a tradition which is part of the entire mass of the Jewish-Christian tradition of St. Luke's first two chapters, and comes to us with the same credentials as the other parts. We are justified, therefore, in regarding it as based upon actual fact. It is conceded that the narrative has been handed down in a poetized form. But this is simply the natural way of expressing some great and impressive experience. It is not difficult to suppose that such an experience actually took place at a time of great popular excitement, when the air was charged with intense Messianic expectations, and at Bethlehem; as Mr. Sweet, following Dr. Gore, observes¹—

“ We may believe, without surrender of the vital point at issue, that the dreams and annunciations, and other machinery of revelation form the poetic accessories and literary draping of experiences so transcendent that the subjects of them could not relate them intelligibly to others, except under the forms hallowed by usage and familiar to those acquainted with the old covenant.”

¹ Birth and Infancy of Jesus Christ, p. 135 (citing Gore Dissertations, p. 21).

CHAPTER V

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE (III)

It remains to discuss the other episodes connected with Our Lord's infancy and boyhood, as these are narrated in Luke ii. They are embraced in two sections: (1) the account of the Circumcision and the Presentation in the Temple (Luke ii. 21-40); and (2) an episode in the boyhood of Jesus (Luke ii. 41-52).

(1) The Circumcision and Presentation in the Temple (Luke ii. 21-40)

We need not linger over the reference to the circumcision, which was carried out, in accordance with the Law, on the eighth day after birth, beyond noting the interesting fact that the naming of the child is closely associated with it. This, with the corresponding passage about the naming of John the Baptist (Luke i. 59) is the chief Biblical evidence that naming was connected with circumcision.¹ The verses (22 f.) which refer to the presentation in the Temple offer some difficult problems of interpretation. The important verses are 22-24, which run as follows: 22—And when the day of their (v. l. her) purification according to the Law of Moses were fulfilled (i.e., 40 days after birth; cf.

¹ Cf. Plummer, op. cit., p. 62. For the naming of the Baptist, see Additional Notes (4), p. 222 f.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

Lev. xii. 2-6) they brought him up to Jerusalem to present him to the Lord; 23—as it is written in the Law of the Lord: every male that openeth the womb shall be called holy to the Lord (cf. Ex. xiii. 32; Numb. xviii. 15-16: first-born to be devoted to Jahveh, and redeemed one month after birth for a specified payment) 24—and to offer a sacrifice according to that which is said in the Law of the Lord, a pair of turtledoves or two young pigeons (i.e., the sacrifice prescribed in Lev. xii. 8, for the purification of the mother 40 days after the birth of the child).

These verses, it will be observed, deal with two distinct things: (1) the purification of the mother, which could not take place till 40 days had elapsed from the child's birth (vv. 22a and 24); and (2), separating these, vv. 22b and 23 refer to the redemption of the first-born son, which normally took place 30 days after birth. Neither of these acts required the presence of any of the parties, at this period, in the Jerusalem Temple; and no evidence exists of a ceremony of the presentation of the child to the Lord. These points can best be made clear by a statement of the normal method of procedure.

According to the Law (Numb. xviii. 16) the first-born son was to be redeemed from a month old, for a money payment of five shekels.¹ No particular place is specified where this is to be effected, either in the Law or later Rabbinic enactments. In fact, in later usage, the redemption could, apparently, be effected, in the absence of the child.¹ The normal practice was, however, as it is to-day, to take the child before a priest, in any convenient place, make a declaration as to the child's being the first-born of his mother, and pay the redemption-money to the priest (= 15s.). In the present form of the rite, after the declaration by the Father (This my first-born son is the first-born of his mother, and the Holy One, blessed be He, hath given command to redeem him, etc.), the Father places the money before the Cohen, who then asks the following question: Which wouldst thou rather give me, thy first-born son, the first-born of his mother, or redeem him for five selaim, which thou art bound to give according to the Law? The Father replies: I desire rather to redeem my son, and here thou hast the value of his redemption, which I am bound to give according to the Law.

¹ No less than five passages deal with the obligation of redeeming the first-born of man in the Law: viz., Ex. xiii. 2, 13, xx. 11, 29, xxiv. 20; Numb. xviii. 15-16. For the ceremony generally, and its implications, cf. *R W S*², pp. 438-41.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

The Cohen (Priest), having taken the redemption-money, returns the child to his Father, who thereupon pronounces the following Blessings—

*Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who hast sanctified us by Thy commandments, and given us command concerning the redemption of the son.*²

¹ Cf. Löw, Lebensalter, p. 111.

² Redemption of the son = Heb. pidyōn ha-bēn (the technical phrase).

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who hast kept us in life, and hast preserved us, and enabled us to reach this season.

The Cohen then takes the redemption-money, and, holding it over the head of the child, says—

This is instead of that, this in commutation for that, this in remission of that. May this child enter into life, into the Law and the fear of Heaven. May it be God's will that, even as he has been admitted to redemption, so may he enter into the Law, the nuptial canopy, and into good deeds.

The Cohen then places his hand upon the head of the child and blesses him (God make thee as Ephraim and Manasseh, etc.¹). It should be added that, if the father of the child be a Cohen or a Levite, or the mother the daughter of a Cohen or Levite, there is no obligation for redemption. The rite, in its present developed form, was not fixed till the post-Talmudic age. But the two blessings pronounced by the father are cited in the Talmud,² and the whole ceremony goes back in its beginnings to a much earlier period.

The normal time for effecting the redemption of the child is, as has already been stated, 30 days after the birth. This is clearly set forth in the rubric attached to the present rite (Singer, p. 308), which runs as follows—

The first-born child, if a male, must be redeemed on the thirty-first day of his birth. . . . Should the thirty-first day fall on a Sabbath or Holy Day, the ceremony is postponed until the day following.

¹ See : Singer, pp. 308-9.

² T. B. Pesahim (end).

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

But, in the prescriptions of the Mishna, embodying the earliest codification of the Jewish Oral Law, provision is definitely made for dealing with cases where, for some reason or other, the redemption money has either not been paid within the prescribed time, or has been paid before the proper time. The important passage, in this connexion, occurs in the Mishna-Tractate (Bekhoroth viii. 6),¹ and runs as follows—

If a first-born son dies within thirty days, the priest must return the money which has been paid for his redemption, if it has already been received ; but if the son die after thirty days, the father must still pay the money to the Priest, if he has not already received it. . . . If the father die within the thirty days, he (the son) is presumed not to have been redeemed, unless proof can be adduced that he has been redeemed —(if the father) die after thirty days, it is presumed that (the son) has been redeemed, until proof (to the contrary) has been adduced.

It is clear from this passage, that exceptions to the normal practice of effecting the redemption on the thirty-first day after birth might, and did, occur. If the parents desired that the ceremony should take place in the Temple²—and there is no

¹ Surenhusius, Vol. V, p. 184.

² All that was necessary was for the father to go (with the child) before a priest, in any place. But it is obvious sufficient reason why this should not have been the case during the period when the Temple was still standing—it might be desirable and convenient to postpone the ceremony. In the case we are considering, the motive for such a postponement lies on the surface of the narrative—the parents desired to combine two ceremonial acts, redemption of the child, and purification of the mother; and the latter could only take place after the lapse of 40 days from the birth. Nor should it be forgotten that the possibility of redemption after the 30 days is supported by the letter of the Law itself (from a month old shalt thou redeem, Numb. xviii. 16).

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

In the case of the purification of the mother, the Law expressly lays down that when the days of her purifying are fulfilled, for a son or for a daughter, she shall bring her sin offering unto the door of the tent of meeting, unto the Priest; and he shall offer it before the Lord, and make atonement for her (Lev. xii. 6-7). Here, it is clearly contemplated that the mother should be present personally in the Sanctuary. But in the later period, when conditions had altered, a system had grown up which made the presence of the mother in the Temple unnecessary. It would obviously be impossible for every mother, in a land where the Jewish population had grown to considerable dimensions and was widely scattered, to undertake that this duty might be performed in Jerusalem at the Temple, where a large number of priests were always available, especially if it were combined with a sacrifice.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH .

a journey to Jerusalem after the birth of every child, for the purpose of purification. It is enacted in the Oral Law (Mishna Nega 'im, xiv. 12) that all the necessary duty could be discharged by the husband. This he could effect by payment of a fixed sum into a receptacle, provided for the purpose, in the Temple, which would automatically be expended in providing the necessary offering. All that he had to do was to be careful to see that the payment was made on the proper day. The priests on duty in the Temple were responsible for arranging that all money provided in this way was expended during the day in the appropriate offerings. In the evening of the same day the woman was ceremonially clean, and freed from the limitations imposed upon her by her previous condition.

But these arrangements by no means prevented those who would wish to do so from being personally present in the Temple at the time when the sacrifices were offered. In fact, it appears from the sources that special arrangements were made by the chief of the lay-representatives on duty, at a particular point in the daily Temple Service, for directing the movements of those who were ceremonially unclean, and were present for the purpose of purification. They were ranged at the Eastern Gate of the Temple (Mishna, Tamid v. 6), i.e., "within the wickets on either side the great Nicanor Gate, at the top of the fifteen steps which led up from the Court of the Women to that of Israel."¹ There is no doubt that women, presenting sin-offerings, were sometimes included on such occasions,¹ and, consequently, that the Mother of Jesus could have attended the Temple Service at which her sacrifice was offered. It is well known that private sacrifices as distinguished from the public sacrifices of the whole congregation, occupied a considerable amount of the time and energy of the priests on duty. A further difficulty in the Lukan account is to determine the precise force of "their" in v. 22 ("when the days of their purification . . . were fulfilled"). The Law speaks only of the purification of the mother. It has been suggested that though there is no direct basis for the use of such a plural in the Old Testament Law,

¹ Edersheim, L J M, I, p. 197.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

"yet it may reflect the thought of the first century respecting the meaning of the ceremony. If it refers to the mother and child, the basis for the inclusion of the child with the mother may have been furnished in the implication of circumcision that the child was unclean at birth, or in the necessary contact of a nursing child with its mother; and because of one or both of these, the thought may have arisen that the child shared in the uncleanness of the mother until her purification, and that the ceremony of purification pertained to them both."²

¹ Cf.: JE, XII, 81b. See also Schechter in Studies in Judaism (first series, 1896), Ch. XIII. (Woman in Temple and Synagogue), esp. p. 386.

² Burton: A Short Introduction to the Gospels (Chicago Press), p. 67.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

It is more probable, on the whole, that the plural pronoun refers to the mother and child than to the father and mother, though the latter would be the natural construction grammatically. The suggestion of Edersheim that the reference is to the Jews in general is fanciful and unconvincing. But another possibility remains. The character of the diction, and the tone of the whole passage, suggest that the Evangelist is here using a Hebrew or Aramaic document. If so, the αὐτῶν ("their") may be due to mistranslation based upon a misreading of the possessive suffix in the original. In this case, the implication will be that the translator was unfamiliar with the details of the Jewish Law.

Another point which it is necessary to discuss is the question of the Presentation of the infant Jesus in the Temple. What is meant by to present (παραστήσαι) him to the Lord? The act, as appears from the context, is bound up with that of the redemption. It was an act of consecration, and may be explained as an interpretation of Ex. xiii. 12, *thou shalt set apart*¹ unto the Lord all that openeth the womb. It is true παραστήσαι is not the LXX. translation of the Hebrew word used here, but it may well be an interpretation of it. Such an act of consecration in behalf of a first-born son is thoroughly in accordance with Jewish feeling and the tenor of the Law. The Jewish commentators on Exodus xiii. 12 (Rashi, et al.), expressly allow that the setting apart of the first-born to the Lord may apply to the first-born of men. It is true we know nothing of a ceremony of presentation either in Jewish law or custom. But the voluntary performance of such an act, especially in the case of one who was the centre of such pious hopes as those that surrounded the infancy of Jesus, would be a perfectly natural expression of that devotion or consecration to the Lord required by the Law. The somewhat analogous case of Hannah's child, who was devoted to the service of God from before his birth, will at once come to mind (1 Sam. i. 11, etc.). The feeling that the first-born should be regarded as a pre-destined priest is curiously persistent among Jews. Thus, a mediaeval Jewish writer says—

¹ Heb. wěha'abariā.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

Our predecessors made the rule to destine every first-born to God, and before its birth the father had to say: "I take the vow that if my wife presents me with a son, he shall be holy unto the Lord, and in His Torah (Law) he shall meditate day and night."¹

"On the eighth day after the Berith Milah (Circumcision) they put the child on cushions, and a Bible on its head, and the elders of the community, or the principal of the College, imparted their blessings to it. These first-born sons formed, when grown up, the chief contingent of the Yeshiboth (Talmudical Colleges), where they devoted the greatest part of their lives to the study of the Torah."²

¹ Cited by Schechter Studies in Judaism ("The child in Jewish Literature"), p. 356.

² Schechter, ibid.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

That some such feeling operated in earlier times would seem to be apparent from the language used in the Mishna in reference to the first-born.¹ It expressly distinguishes between the first-born "who is fit for the priesthood" (Heb. Bekhor le-kohen), and the first-born who is only "fit for inheritance" (Heb. Bekhor le-nahala). Only those who came within the first category (i.e., who were not affected with such bodily defects as would disqualify them for the priesthood) were required to be redeemed. The other class might inherit, but were not to be redeemed. If, then, only a child without such blemish could be redeemed, "it would seem almost a matter of necessity that the child should be taken before the priest, and so naturally, in the case of all those living near to Jerusalem, to the Temple. Such a presentation could hardly have followed the payment of the redemption price, but must have preceded or accompanied it."²

In estimating the credibility of the passage as a whole, it is important that we should keep in mind the following considerations: (1) we know far too little in detail about the manifold activities that centred in the Temple during the first century of our era to dogmatize as to the non-existence and growth of a pious custom, when such is attested in a narrative that otherwise appears to be credible and ancient. Unless the alleged facts are flagrantly out of harmony with known Jewish usage, it is precarious to dismiss them on purely a priori

¹ Bekhoroth, VIII, 1.

² Burton, op. cit., p. 77.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

grounds. It has been shewn in the previous discussion that the alleged facts are not out of harmony with known Jewish usage ; that, on the contrary, there is much that indirectly supports their claim to acceptance as true. It is important, in this connexion, to remember that the Gospel-Narrative does not state that the presence of the Holy Family in the Temple was required by the Law ; it simply alleges the fact that they were present. We know from many other examples referred to in the Rabbonical Literature that various pious customs in excess of the bare requirements of the Law were practised in certain circles in connection with the Temple. Further, (2) if the writer of this narrative were not basing his statements on facts, and was himself ignorant of Jewish custom, though possessing (as he evidently did possess) knowledge of and access to the Old Testament Scriptures, it is probable that he would have made his references to the Old Testament more exact.

“ The very departures from the letter of the Law imply that behind this narrative there lies something besides the bare prescriptions of the Law and the imagination of the writer.”¹

It is incredible that St. Luke can have invented the whole series of incidents. Everything suggests that he derived his narrative from a Hebrew-Christian source. Its Hebrew-Christian character, sobriety of tone, and general simplicity guarantee its essential genuineness. We may, therefore, confidently interpret the sequence of events in the way suggested by the narrative itself. The Virgin, together with Joseph and the young Child, proceeded from Bethlehem to Jerusalem (a two hours' walk) on the fortieth day after the birth; the young Child was presented and redeemed, in the presence of a priest, within the Temple-precincts; and Mary made the accustomed offering to complete her purification.

¹ Burton, op. cit., p. 78.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

The beautiful figures of Simeon and Anna, the "prophetess," daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Asher, form a striking feature in the story of the visit to the Temple. They belong to the pious circle—forming a minority in contemporary Israel—which included Zacharias the priest, and Elizabeth, as well as Joseph and Mary; and they live in the same atmosphere. We are once again confronted with their Messianic ideals, set forth in poetical form. To the conception of Messianic salvation expressed in the Song of Zacharias, which blesses God for the gift of it—a salvation which consists in moral and spiritual redemption¹—the Song of Simeon adds one other great idea; the Messiah whose advent is celebrated is to be not only the ¹ The characteristic Hebrew-Christian idea of the Messianic salvation is that it consists essentially in the remission of sins; this is expressed both in Matthew (i. 21: Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins) and also in Luke (ii. 77: to give knowledge of salvation unto his people in the remission of their sins).

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE spiritual glory of His people Israel, but also a light for revelation to the Gentiles—

I

*Now lettest then Thy servant depart, O Lord,
According to Thy word in peace,
For mine eyes have seen Thy salvation,
Which Thou hast prepared before the face of all peoples,—
A light for revelation to the Gentiles,
And the glory of Thy people Israel.*

II

*Behold this one is set for the falling,
And the rising of many in Israel ;
And for a sign which is spoken against—Yea, and a sword shall pierce through thine own soul ;
That thoughts out of many hearts may be revealed.*
(Luke ii. 29–35.)

The idea of the Messiah as a light for revelation of the Gentiles is, of course, an echo of the great Servant-passages in Deutero-Isaiah, in which the Servant's mission is defined—

*So I make thee a light of the nations,
That my salvation may be to the ends of the earth.*
(Isaiah xlix. 6 ; cf. xlii. 6.)

It is worth noting here that this conception occurs in a Messianic connexion in the Similitudes of the

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Ethiopic Book of Enoch, where we read of the Heavenly Son of Man—

*He shall be a staff to the righteous,
On which they shall support themselves and not fall ;
And He shall be the light of the Gentiles,
And the hope of those that are troubled in heart.*

In the second strophe, another note is struck ; the strain of sorrow mingles with the bouyant hope of what precedes—

Behold this one is set for the falling, etc.

In these words, we catch a note of foreboding that the advent of the Messiah will be accompanied by strife and suffering. It will be in the nature of a discriminating judgment, serving to reveal the thoughts of many hearts.

As the writer has said elsewhere,¹ in these poems “ we catch a glimpse of a pious circle in Israel who were awaiting the advent of a Messiah who should effect the moral and spiritual redemption of His people ; who should reign as a spiritual prince in the hearts of a regenerate people, and so fulfil the old promises made to the House of David ; and one who should extend His spiritual dominion to the ends of the earth. These hopes were based and nourished upon Old Testament prophecy, and were cherished within a limited circle who were to be found both among the learned—especially among the disciples of Hillel—and also among the people. Among the latter were doubtless included some of the more spiritually-minded of the apocalyptists. . . . Doubtless the poems on which this estimate is based are the product, to some extent, of reflexion. They exhibit the piety of the primitive Palestinian Christian Church. Their genuinely primitive character and their essential conformity to truth and fact are guaranteed by their whole tone and character, their Christology, and their setting. In them we ought to see, as I venture to think, translations of hymns, originally composed in Hebrew for liturgical use in the early Palestinian Community of Hebrew-Christians.”

¹ The Christian Messiah in the light of Judaism ancient and modern, an article published in the J T S for April, 1912, p. 323.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

The figures of Anna and Simeon are doubtless historical,¹ though the story may, to some extent, have been idealized. They could hardly have been invented. Living, as they did, in an atmosphere of pious hope and exaltation, they would easily respond to the Messianic excitement of the little group from Bethlehem which surrounded the young Child.

It is a notable feature that, while the whole narrative obviously reflects an atmosphere of tense

¹ If the figure of Anna, for instance, had been entirely fictitious, some Biblical or other well-known character would have been selected to play the part assigned to her. Thus Sarah, the daughter of Asher (Gen. xlv. 17, cf. Numb. xxvi. 46 ; 1 Sam. vii. 30), is made the subject of Rabbinic legend, according to which her life was wonderfully prolonged all through the sojourn in Egypt, and even later.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

expectation, the language is graceful and restrained. There is little that is extravagant about it. Perhaps there is some exaggeration in the description of Anna as a widow even for fourscore and four years, which departed not from the Temple, worshipping with fastings and supplications night and day. Here, the number of the years of widowhood has, perhaps, grown in the early stages of the oral tradition, and the statement that she departed not from the Temple cannot be taken literally. What is meant is that she spent as much time as possible within the Temple-precincts.¹ No woman could possibly have lived within the Temple-area. It is interesting to notice that it is the Temple which is the headquarters of this little group of quietists, not the synagogue. The Temple offered a less restricted arena for a woman's activities, and would naturally attract a "prophetess." This circle to which Joseph of Arimathea probably belonged (Luke xxiii. 51), was looking for the Messianic salvation or "Consolation"² of Israel. We are reminded of the mourners of Sion who practise humility, who when they have had to listen to reproach against

¹ Lightfoot's explanation (Horae ad loc.) is probably the right one: she departed not from the Temple; "that is, not in the stated times of prayer." He appositely compares Lev. x. 7 (addressed to Aaron and his sons): Ye shall not go from out the door of the Tabernacle, which Sifra ad loc. explains not in the time of their ministry.

² Heb. nehāmā, a technical term in this connexion cf.: Ap. Bar. XLIV. As we have seen, a favourite name for the expected Messiah was Menaḥem, i.e., "Consoler"; see above p. 82.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

*themselves have kept silent, who have not grasped at material good for themselves.*¹ In the same context a saying is quoted which runs: He who is on the watch for (the Messianic) salvation, the Holy One, Blessed be He, will cause him to lie down in the Garden of Eden, as it is said in (Ezek. xxxiv. 15): "I myself will feed my sheep, and I will cause them to lie down." In Simeon's Song, the eager longing for the expected salvation, expressed by the figure of the watchman straining his gaze on the watch-tower, is already satisfied. The watchman can leave his post with a calm untroubled spirit, because at last his eyes have seen the promised salvation.

The atmosphere of the entire section is unmistakably Jewish and quietist. It could not have been invented by the Evangelist. This is fully admitted by so unprejudiced a witness as the distinguished Jewish scholar Dr. K. Kohler, who, while he will not commit himself so far as to guarantee the historic character of Simeon and Anna, yet acknowledges that "these two stories of Luke have the true Jewish colouring."²

In vv. 39 and 40, we probably have summary statements which are due to St. Luke himself. He seems not to be any longer translating from the primitive document. Under these circumstances, his silence about any further sojourn of the Holy Family at Bethlehem cannot well be pressed.

¹ Pesikta rabbathi, XXXIV.

² J E, I, 609 b.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

He may not have known of any such sojourn, and probably did not know of the journey to Egypt. In any case, such details did not interest him. He was concerned, rather, to bring the Holy Family as quickly as possible to the place of their most permanent sojourn, which became "their own city"—Nazareth.

(2) An Episode in the Boyhood of Jesus (Luke ii. 41-52)

The story of Jesus' first visit to Jerusalem, after the Presentation in the Temple, is told in this section of the Third Gospel. It is interesting as being the only episode recorded in the canonical Gospels of the Life between infancy and manhood.¹ It obviously interested the Evangelist for a special reason—the reply to the reproachful question of Mary:² Son why hast thou thus dealt with us? Behold thy father and I sought thee sorrowing. The reply that follows is no doubt correctly rendered in the R.V.: *How is it that ye sought me? Wist ye not that I must be in my Father's house?*³ The comment that follows: And they understood not

¹ Also as containing the last recorded reference to Joseph (v. 51): "he was almost certainly dead before Christ's public ministry began" (Plummer).

² Notice the prominence of Mary, a feature that characterizes the earlier narrative in ch. i., to which we have already called attention. This suggests that the narrative we are considering belongs to the same cycle as the earlier one, and that both are dominated by the idea of the Virgin Birth (see above, p. 40).

³ This rather than "about my father's business" is the right rendering: see Plummer, ad loc.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

the saying which he spake unto them, is significant. Plummer's exegesis is no doubt right—

“ There is a gentle but decisive correction of His Mother's words ‘ Thy father and I ’ in the reply, ‘ Where should a child be ($\delta\epsilon\iota$) but in his father's house ? And my Father is God.’ It is notable that the first recorded words of the Messiah are an expression of His Divine Sonship as man ; and His question implies that they knew it, or ought to know it.”

In the light of the narratives as a whole, the words point unmistakably to the Virgin Birth. But such a reply took them by surprise. The secret of the wondrous birth had never been divulged to the Child. Perhaps, even, the glamour of it, in the years of commonplace existence that had elapsed, had partially faded for them. Could He possibly be hinting at His own consciousness of a mysterious and divine origin ? They could not tell. *They understood not the saying.*¹ Or the sentence may have a wider significance. They only gradually came to understand all that was involved in the Child's mission and destiny. As Plummer remarks—

“ They learnt only gradually what His Messiahship involved, and this is one stage in the process.

· ¹ Some such Hebrew expression as bēshel 'abî = “ in what belongs to my Father ” may lie at the basis of the saying : cf. T B Kidd, 57b : Slaughter what is owing to me (Heb. shellî, i.e., the sacrifices) on what belongs to me (Heb. bē shellî, i.e., in Temple-grounds).

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

From the point of view of her subsequent knowledge, Mary recognized that at this stage she and Joseph had not understood."

Such a touch can only have emanated from the Virgin herself. The following verse (And He went down with them and came to Nazareth; and he was subject unto them: and His Mother kept all these sayings (or things) in her heart) also betrays the mother's heart. She shews in the words a natural anxiety to remove the impression "that in His reply (v. 49) Jesus resents, or henceforward repudiates" the authority of His "parents" over Him. The verse also bears witness to the impression made upon her own heart by these occurrences. The beauty, restraint, and psychological truth of the whole narrative are a sufficient guarantee of its essential historicity. It is a picture drawn from the life. But critical objections are not wanting. Gressmann, as we have seen, regards it as a beautiful legend. It is pointed out that it is a common tendency to reflect back the greatness of distinguished men on to the years of youth in fictitious episodes, and in such a category, it is alleged, the story of Jesus amazing the Jewish Doctors in the Temple, naturally falls. The whole story is modelled on Old Testament precedents—Samuel, who dwelt in the Temple, was a prophet from his thirteenth year (cf. Josephus, Ant. v. x. 4); in fact, the history of Samuel formed the model for the Lukan narrative (cf. 1 Sam. ii. 26, and Luke ii. 52). But all this fails to account for the psychological truth of the story and its simplicity. These could hardly have been invented. The contrasted fictions of the Apocryphal Gospels are alone sufficient to prove this to an unprejudiced mind. The Old Testament narrative may have affected the form, but not the substance, of the story. Such considerations have brought conviction even to so severe a critic of the Gospels as Keim, who says¹—

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

“It does seem to us, after all has been said, that this fine, tender picture, in which neither truth to nature nor the beauty which that implies, is violated in a single line, in which youthful strivings in their truth and error alike, are drawn with such depth of meaning, picturing so completely beforehand the stages of his after life, cannot have been devised by human hands, which left to themselves were always betrayed into coarseness and exaggeration, as shown by the apocryphal Gospels, and even some stories of the youth of Old Testament heroes—but only by true history.”

ADDITIONAL NOTE (3).—Spitta on the Chronological Notices and Hymns in Luke i.-ii.

An important article by Spitta on The Chronological Notices and the Hymns in Luke i. and ii., which was published in the Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft in 1906,² calls for some notice here. Spitta regards Luke i. 34 f., as an addition made to the original source-document by the Editor of the Lukan Gospel, "based on accounts of the birth of Jesus, like that in Matt. i. 18-25," and the view that Mary conceived by the Holy Spirit. He holds that the rest of the source-document knows nothing of a Virgin Birth. This view has already been sufficiently criticized in a previous chapter (pp. 35 ff.) and need not detain us now. He thinks the Nativity-Narratives embodied in the First and Third Gospels absolutely irreconcilable.

¹ Jesus of Nazara (E. T.), ii. 137.

² Siebanter Jahrgang. Heft 4, pp. 281–317. (Die Chronologischen Notizen und die Hymnen in Lc. I und 2: von Friedrich Spitta.)

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

It is, however, his treatment of the chronological problem that is most interesting. Here, he strikes out a bold and original line. He first criticizes the view that the date of the enrolment under Quirinius, mentioned in Luke ii. 2, can be A.D. 6-7. This is irreconcilable with iii. 23, according to which Jesus must have been about thirty years old just after His baptism. Since John's preaching activity is dated in the fifteenth year of Tiberius (i.e., A.D. 28-29), Jesus, on this reckoning, can only have been, at the most, 24 years old. On the other hand, Luke iii. 23, implies the view that Jesus was born after the death of Herod (4 B.C.).

The mention of Judas the Galilean in connexion with the enrolment in Acts v. 37 suggests that Galilee was the scene of the rising, as it is known from Josephus that this Judas sprang from Gamala in the Gaulanitis, and, therefore, was not a Galilean by birth. Now, Josephus relates (Ant. xvii. x. 5 ; Bell. Jud. ii. iv. 1) that a rising, headed by Judas, took place in Galilee soon after Herod's death ; and the account given of this, Spitta thinks, agrees well with the reference in Acts v. The account of the same Judas which appears in Ant. xviii. i. 1, and Bell. Jud. ii. viii. 1, in connexion with the time immediately following the deposition of Archelaus (A.D. 6-7), Spitta regards as an erroneous doublet. Josephus is badly informed of the events that occurred in the interval between the death of Herod (4 B.C.) and the accession of Agrippa (A.D. 41). The enrolment of Quirinius is to be placed in the years 4-3 B.C., when he was Governor of the Province of Syria for the first time.¹ Spitta defends the Lukan account which represents the enrolment as taking place in accordance with Jewish custom, by tribes and families, as probably historical. Such a concession to Jewish prejudices might well have been made at a time when Judaea had not yet formally been incorporated into the Roman Empire. The result reached by Spitta, which will surprise some readers, is that it is probable that Jesus really was born in Bethlehem, and that the journey thither was undertaken in consequence of the enrolment of Quirinius, which took place some short time after Herod's death in 4-3 B.C. Spitta even thinks that knowledge of this fact—that He was sprung from the House of David and had been born

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

¹ Schürer and Mommsen place the first governorship at about this time. Cf. also Zahn, Die Syrische Statthalterschaft u.d. Schätzung d. Quirinius (Neue Kirchl. Zeitsch., 1893, pp. 654 ; also his Introduction to the New Testament, Vol. II).

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

at Bethlehem—played a not unimportant part in the development of Jesus' Messianic consciousness.

To the question of the Hymns in the Nativity-Narratives of the Third Gospel (Luke i. 46–55, 67–79, ii. 14, 29–31) Spitta also devotes a long discussion. He points out that the Gloria in Excelsis (Luke ii. 14) has a remarkable parallel in Luke xix. 38—

*Peace in Heaven
And glory in the highest.*

The idea that Heaven is the source of peace occurs in the Ethiopic Enoch (lxxi. 15)—

He calls unto thee Peace in the name of the world to come; for from thence proceeds peace since the creation of the world.

A closer parallel still is to be found in the full form of the Jewish Kaddish, which contains the following¹—

May there be abundant peace from Heaven, and life for us and for all Israel.

He who maketh peace in His high places (i.e., in Heaven = ἐν ὑψίστοις).

May He make peace for us and for all Israel.

Spitta, therefore, concludes that both passages are fragmentary quotations from an ancient Hebrew hymn. This may very likely be the case. The Song of the Angels would, naturally, assume the diction of a well-known formula, sanctioned by usage, which fittingly expressed the feeling of exultant praise of God.

¹ See Singer, p. 77. The Kaddish is one of the oldest and most popular of the Jewish Prayers, and, in some of its clauses, is parallel to the Lord's Prayer.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

Of the other hymns, Spitta regards the Song of Zacharias (Luke i. 68-79) as composite in character. It is made up of two originally distinct poems, which refer to different things; vv. 68-75 are a song of thanksgiving for the advent of the Messiah, while vv. 76-79 refer to the future of his newly-born child, John. Only the latter fit the occasion suggested by the prose-setting for the Song. And so with the other hymns. When the contexts are critically examined, none are found to fit. They are purely Jewish songs, which have been worked over and inserted in their present settings by a Christian editor.

There is much in Spitta's study that is valuable and suggestive. But he does not sufficiently allow, it seems to us, for the possibility that Hebrew-Christians would naturally use Jewish forms to express their new faith, and to expound the new truths. That in the process there should be some lack of logical adjustment, some failure in precision of statement, is not surprising. When it is remembered that the forms employed are largely those of poetry, many difficulties vanish. The people who used them as a vehicle of expression borrowed the forms from what lay nearest at hand. But they were striving to express certain convictions and facts. It is the task of sympathetic historical study to get below the surface to these underlying facts and convictions.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

ADDITIONAL NOTE (4)—On the Chronology

Essentially the same conclusion as Spitta's regarding the date of Jesus' birth is reached by W. Weber in an article on The Census of Quirinius according to Josephus, which was published in the ZNTW in 1909.¹ We cannot here follow his investigation in detail.

Briefly, he subjects the relevant material extant in the Antiquities and the Bellum Judaicum to a searching examination, points out certain discrepancies and difficulties, and concludes that two different sources have been used by Josephus, and the presence of doublets has to be allowed for.² Judas the son of Ezekias is identical with Judas of Ganlanitis (Judas the Galilean). The final conclusion reached is that the enrolment mentioned by St. Luke in the Gospel and the Acts refers to one and the same event. It was carried out under the direction of Quirinius (= Sabinus), who at that time was Governor of the Province of Syria, in the year 4 B.C., between Passover and Pentecost. The disturbances that accompanied it were particularly serious in Northern Palestine (Galilee). The account of Jesus' birth given in Luke ii., is essentially correct. Jesus was born about Pentecost

¹ Zehnter Jahrgang Heft 4 (Der Census des Quirinius nach Josephus, von Wm. Weber, pp. 307-319).

² In particular, the Sabinus mentioned in Ant. xvii. ix. 3, et al., is identical with Quirinius. The confusion between the two names may easily have arisen in the Aramaic text of the source (סבין קירין).

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

in the year 4 B.C., at Bethlehem in Judaea. He proceeds—

“ It is easy to explain why Mary, in spite of—or rather because of—her condition accompanied her husband to Bethlehem. Nazareth is not far distant from Sepphoris (where the disturbances under Judas reached their height). Joseph belonged to the peace-loving (quietists) in the land; otherwise he would not have enrolled himself in Judaea. . . . For Mary and himself he possessed in Bethlehem a secure resting-place. There he could wait till the storm in Galilee had spent its force. Meanwhile Jesus saw the light of the world, and after he had been presented in the Temple, Joseph with his wife and child could return undisturbed to Nazareth. Public peace had been restored.”

In an article published in The Expositor for Nov., 1912 (pp. 462–477) on The Date of Herod's Marriage with Herodias and the Chronology of the Gospels, Prof. Kirsopp Lake discusses the difficulties involved in the commonly accepted chronology, and himself proposes, somewhat tentatively, a new reconstruction. From an examination of Josephus' evidence, he concludes that “ the year A.D. 35 is the most probable for the marriage of Herod (Antipas) and Herodias, although a few months earlier is not entirely inconceivable.”

“ If, then, we had only the evidence of Josephus to enable us to date the chronology of the Gospel, we should certainly say that it is clear from Mark that the ministry of Jesus was contemporary with the death of John the Baptist, that His death was later than the death of John the Baptist, that the death of John the Baptist was contemporary, or nearly so, with the marriage of Herod and Herodias, and that therefore the death of Jesus could not but be later than the marriage of Herod and Herodias in the year 34-35."

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

This line of argument suggests that the Passover of 36 is "the latest possible date for the Crucifixion," but how can this be reconciled with Luke iii. 1, according to which John the Baptist began to preach in the fifteenth year of Tiberius (i.e., 28-29), and (inferentially) Jesus' Baptism took place a short time afterwards, so that the Crucifixion cannot have been later than 32 or 33?

A study of the evidence seems to raise the question: "whether we ought not to revise our whole conception of the chronology of early Christianity."

Professor Lake suggests that the date given in Luke iii. 1, which is correct, simply states that John the Baptist began to preach in A.D. 28-29.

"This is generally taken to mean that Jesus was baptized in that year. But St. Luke does not say this; what he says is that John the Baptist began to preach in the fifteenth year of Tiberius, and that he continued to do so until Herod, whom he had rebuked for marrying Herodias, put him in prison. He then says that Jesus was baptized by John, and that he, after the temptation, began to preach in Galilee . . .

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

the natural interpretation of these statements is that John the Baptist preached from the fifteenth year of Tiberius to the time when Herod married Herodias (i.e., 34–35), and that the baptism of Jesus was one of his last acts.”

We may, then, suppose that the Census of Quirinius referred to by St. Luke in the Birth-Narrative is that of A.D. 6, that Jesus was born in this year, and that His Baptism took place “probably in the year 35,” when He was, as St. Luke supposed, in His thirtieth year. One serious difficulty in this reconstruction—apart from the fact that it rejects the whole Nativity-Story of St. Matthew, which clearly places the birth of Our Lord within the reign of Herod the Great (i.e., before 4 B.C.)—is how to reconcile it with the chronology of St. Paul’s life. This is overcome by the hypothesis of a textual error in Gal. ii. 1. If for “fourteen years” (ἰδ’ ἐτῶν), we suppose the primitive text to have read “four years” (δ’ ἐτῶν),¹ “the whole chronology of St. Paul can be put ten years later than it usually is so far as the conversion and his history up to the time of his second visit to Jerusalem is concerned.”

“That means that the conversion was about A.D. 43, and if so, we shall have no difficulty in accepting 36 as the year of the crucifixion, and thus satisfactorily accepting the obvious and natural meaning both of Josephus and of Mark.” This reconstruction—ingenious as it is—is hardly convincing. It does too much violence to some of the data. Nor can it be said that its interpretation of Josephus' evidence about the date of Herod's marriage with Herodias is entirely convincing. What Josephus says is that "Aretas made this [the divorce of Aretas' daughter] the first occasion of his enmity between him and Herod, who had also some quarrel with him about the limits of the country of Gemalitis." It looks as though the quarrel, which eventually led to hostilities, gradually grew. The divorce was only the beginning of it. It may not have culminated for some considerable time; and there were other causes. Consequently, Herod's marriage with Herodias may be dated, even on Josephus' evidence, at a much earlier time than A.D. 34-35.

¹ On this suggestion, see Appended Notes (7), p. 227.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

The difficulties that beset the problem must be fully admitted, and no completely satisfactory solution has yet been proposed. In particular, the date of the first governorship of Quirinius is uncertain. If Ramsay's arguments respecting this are not accepted, the possibility remains that an error may have arisen in St. Luke's account by the substitution of one proper name for another. And, perhaps, the best solution that has been offered lies along this line. It has been stated admirably by Burton.¹

"The statement of Tertullian (Adv. Marc., iv. 19) which connects the birth of Jesus with a census held by Sentius Saturninus, Governor of Syria 9-7 B.C., has usually been set aside because of its conflict with the statement of Luke. But the very fact that it is not derived from the New Testament suggests that it perhaps rested on independent evidence; and when we find the other date given by Luke pressing the census back into the very years of the Governorship of Saturninus, it is obvious to inquire whether Luke has not confused the names of Saturninus and Quirinius. Let it be noted that there were two enrolments, one falling in A.D. 6-7, and one about 9-8 B.C., both apparently known to Luke; that there were two Governorships of Quirinius; that the second of these enrolments fell in the second Governorship of Quirinius; and finally that the names Quirinius and Saturninus are at least slightly alike. Is it not possible that, associating the two Governorships of Quirinius and the two enrolments, one of them under Quirinius, he may have fallen into the error of two enrolments, each in a Governorship of Quirinius? If so, the mistake is in the name of Quirinius, not in the fact or date of the enrolment."

¹ A short Introduction to the Gospels, p. 73 f. The whole discussion (pp. 68-74) is valuable and lucid.

THE NARRATIVE OF ST. LUKE

On this view, the date of the Birth must be placed in 9-8 B.C. As it is known that there was considerable variety of method in reckoning the years of the Emperors, it is at least possible that St. Luke reckoned the Principate of Tiberius, not from the death of Augustus in A.D. 14, but from the time when Tiberius began, by a decree of the Senate, to exercise in the provinces authority equal to that of the Emperor (i.e., from A.D. 11-12). As St. Luke wrote in the provinces where this authority was exercised, his adoption of such a method of reckoning is not altogether improbable. In fact, as Ramsay has pointed out, the years of Titus, in whose reign, or very soon afterwards, St. Luke wrote, were reckoned from his co-regency with Vespasian, and offer a striking analogy. On this reckoning, the fifteenth year of Tiberius (Luke iii. 1) would begin in A.D. 25, and the Baptism of Jesus may have fallen within this year. If Jesus was born in 9-8 B.C., this would make him at least 33 years old at the time of the baptism, which may possibly harmonize with the vague terms of Luke iii. 23 (And Jesus himself, when he began to teach, was about thirty years of age). How much latitude is covered by the vague term "about"? It may be suggested, also, that St. Luke may not have known the exact, but only the approximate, date of the earlier census, and that this may have affected the accuracy of his reckoning here.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

CHAPTER VI

THE BIRTH AND CHILDHOOD OF JESUS IN THE APOCRYPHAL GOSPELS

THOUGH the discussion of the evidence, or alleged "silence," of the other New Testament documents ought, logically, to follow at this point, it may conveniently be postponed till the following chapter, and give place to some slight consideration of the picture given in apocryphal writings of the Birth and Infancy of Jesus. It is, of course, not intended here to investigate, or to attempt to discuss in any adequate way, this literature as a whole.¹ Such a task would require a volume at least. All that will be essayed will be to illustrate from the Apocryphal material the way in which fancy and imagination and dogmatic prepossession work, when uncontrolled by the restraining influence of genuine ¹ A convenient edition in English, with a general Introduction to the Literature, is B. H. Cowper's Apocryphal Gospels (5th ed., 1881). The most complete corpus, with Introductions, is the German work, edited by E. Hennecke, Neutestamentliche Apokryphen (with contributions from various scholars), 2 vols., 1904. Of older works, Fabricius is still a standard one and Thilo's Codex Apocryphus. Nov. Test. is useful. A valuable art. Gospels (Apocryphal), by Findlay, in Hastings' D C G should be consulted.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

tradition. The contrast afforded with the canonical narratives will be found illuminating.

While it is true that some representatives of the Apocryphal Gospel Literature may be regarded as possessing an independent value, as preserving some genuine tradition of a first-hand character—this is almost certainly true of the Gospel according to the Hebrews—yet the majority are of a distinctly lower order. Based, in the main, on the canonical Gospels in their completed canonical form, they bear on their face a decidedly second-hand character. The accretions to the original Gospel-material are largely legendary, and are the product of two main causes—

(i) The desire, which in some circles assumed the nature of a popular demand, for fuller information about the Life of Christ than that given in the Canonical Gospels.

“ This intelligible and not unnatural curiosity was directed chiefly to the facts antecedent to Christ’s advent, and to those periods of His life which the older Gospels left in shadow, His parentage, His birth and childhood, and the period after the Resurrection.”¹

Curiously enough, however, no attempt is made in these writings to fill up the gap between the childhood and entrance on the public ministry. The reason for this probably is “ the absence of any dogmatic motive ” for the formation of such information.

¹ Findlay in D C G, I, p. 671.

JESUS IN THE APOCRYPHAL GOSPELS

As Findlay remarks¹—

“In the main it is certain that the details furnished by the Apocryphal writings regarding matters about which the canonical Gospels are silent, have little or no historical basis. They are in reality Christian Haggadoth,² popular stories similar to those in Jewish literature which were framed for purposes of pious entertainment and instruction. The Gospels of the Infancy and Childhood, for example, are full of legendary matter drawn from various sources, or freely invented by the fancy of the writers. Where the details are not entirely imaginative, they have their origin in the transformation of utterances of Christ into deeds, or in the literal interpretation of O.T. prophecies and Jewish expectations about the Messiah, or in the ascription to Jesus of miracles similar to those recorded in the O.T.”³

“It is necessary, however, to allow for the possibility that here and there in this literature authentic material not derived from the canonical Gospels has been preserved.

¹ Ibid.

² Haggada = “narration” is applied technically to all the non-legal element in Rabbinical literature; it embraces the homiletical as well as the illustrative element (stories and legends and folk-lore generally).

³ Thus an O.T. text (Ps. cxlviii. 7) which runs: Praise the Lord from the Earth, ye dragons, is transformed in pseudo-Matthew into an incident which represents dragons as coming out of a cave and worshipping the child Christ. Again, the picture in Is. xi. 6 ff. suggested the legend that all kinds of wild beasts accompanied the Holy Family on the way to Egypt. See Cowper, op. cit., p. lix. f.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

“ Oral tradition maintained itself for a time after our present Gospels were reduced to writing, and it is not improbable that genuine sayings of Christ and authentic details about His life have been preserved in uncanonical books.” ¹

(ii) A much more powerful motive that operated in the production of these writings was the dogmatic interest. They were largely composed in the interests of certain beliefs which were held in certain sections of the Church. Some of these foreshadow tendencies which later crystallized into definite heresies.

Though these Gospels were never admitted to canonical rank, some of them were greatly prized, in certain sections of the Church, for devotional purposes.

“ The popularity of the Childhood Gospels was remarkable, especially in the Churches of the East. There the Prot-evangelium was so highly prized as a book of devotion that it was used for reading in public worship, and furnished material for the homilies of preachers. Translations of it circulated in Syriac, Coptic, and Arabic, and, along with other childhood legends, its stories, often graphically embellished and exaggerated, found a place in a comprehensive Gospel of the Infancy and Childhood, the so-called ‘ Arabic Gospel,’ which had a wide circulation, not only in the Churches of the East, but in Mohammedan circles. Passages of the Prot-evangelium stand in the lectionaries of the orthodox Church for use at the festivals in honour of Mary, and of her reputed parents, Joachim and Anna."

¹ Findlay, ibid.

JESUS IN THE APOCRYPHAL GOSPELS

We may now cite a few illustrations to show the character of this literature, beginning with the Prot-evangelium, or so-called "Gospel of James." This compilation, in its present form, has been amplified by the addition of a group of incidents dealing with Zacharias, the father of the Baptist. Apart from this addition, it forms a uniform composition and is a well-constructed romance, dominated by certain dogmatic interests. Its main purpose was to safeguard the Divinity of Christ against Jewish-Christian misconceptions, and to provide an answer against those who reproached Christians with the lowly, if not shameful, birth of Jesus. Most scholars assign its composition to the second half of the second century A.D. It is probably the oldest writing which professes to give the names of the parents of the Virgin. The sources of the Book are the canonical Gospels of St. Matthew and St. Luke, parts of the Old Testament (both canonical and apocryphal), and popular traditions both Jewish and Christian.

It begins by narrating how Joachim and Anna prayed that the reproach of childlessness might be removed from them. In answer to their prayers, Mary is born (ch. i.-v.). When Mary is three years old she is taken to the Temple, where she lives till the age of twelve, and she is fed by an angel (ch.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

vi.-vii. and viii. beg.). Chapter viii. then continues—

And when she became twelve years old, there was held a council of the priests, who said: "Behold Mary is become twelve years old in the Temple of the Lord. What, then, shall we do with her, lest perchance the sanctuary of the Lord be defiled?" And they said to the High Priest: "Thou hast stood at the altar of the Lord; go in, and pray for her." And behold the angel of the Lord stood by, saying unto him: "Zacharias, Zacharias,¹ go forth and summon the widowers of the people, and let them take a rod apiece, and she shall be the wife of him to whom the Lord shall show a sign." And the criers went out through all the region of Judaea round about, and the trumpet of the Lord sounded, and all ran together.

Joseph answers to the summons with the rest of the widowers, and is singled out for the charge of the "Virgin of the Lord" by a dove which comes out of the rod that had been given him, and alights on his hand. He wishes to refuse the charge, because he is an old man and has children: "Let me not become ridiculous to the children of Israel," he says. He yields, however, to solemn admonition, and accepts the charge (ch. ix.).

After this, the priests, wishing to have a veil made for the Temple, summon the undefiled virgins of the family of David, and among them Mary, who is chosen by lot to spin the "true purple and ¹ i.e., the father of the Baptist, who is represented as High Priest.

JESUS IN THE APOCRYPHAL GOSPELS

the scarlet ” ; and with these she returns home. (ch. x.). While drawing water at the well, she receives the Annunciation : “ Fear not Mary, for thou hast found favour before the Lord of all, and thou shalt conceive from His Word ” (ch. xi.). Then follows the story of the visit to Elizabeth, and at the conclusion it is stated that “ she was sixteen years old when these mysteries happened ” (ch. xii.). When the sixth month came, Joseph, returning from his work one day, discovers her condition, and reproaches her (ch. xiii.). Then follows an account of Joseph’s disturbance of mind about his discovery. His fears and doubts are removed by an “ angel of the Lord ” in a dream (ch. xiv.). The condition of Mary becomes known to the priests (ch. xv.). The narrative then proceeds (ch. xvi.)—

And the priest said (to Joseph) : “ Restore the virgin which thou receivedst from the Temple of the Lord.” And Joseph wept very much. And the priest said : “ I will cause you to drink the water of the Lord’s reproof, and it shall manifest your sins before your eyes ” (cf. Numb. v. 17). And the priest took and gave it to Joseph to drink, and sent him into the hill country ; and he returned quite sound. And he also gave it to Mary to drink, and sent her into the hill country ; and she returned quite sound. And all the people wondered that sin was not found in them. And the priest said : “ If the Lord God hath not manifested your sins, neither do I judge you ” ; and he dismissed them. And Joseph took

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Mary, and went to his house rejoicing, and glorifying the God of Israel.

(Ch. xvii.). And there was a command from Augustus the King, that all who were in Bethlehem of Judaea should be enrolled. And Joseph said : " I will enrol my children, but what shall I do with this damsel ? How shall I enrol her ? As my wife ? I am ashamed to do it. As my daughter ? But all the children of Israel know that she is not my daughter. The day of the Lord will itself bring it about as the Lord willeth it." And he saddled the ass, and set her upon it, and his son led it, and Joseph followed.

The account of the Birth in a cave near Bethlehem follows (ch. xviii.). Here, the narrative suddenly changes from the third to the first person—

And I, Joseph, was walking, and was not walking ; and I looked up into the air, and saw the air violently agitated ; and I looked up at the pole of heaven, and saw it stationary, and the fowls of heaven still ; and I looked at the earth and saw a vessel lying, and workmen reclining by it, and their hands in the vessel, and those who handled it did not handle it, and those who took did not lift, and those who presented it to their mouth did not present it, but the faces of all were looking up. . . .

(Ch. xix.). And I saw a woman coming down from the hill country, and she said to me : " O man, whither art thou going ?" And I said : " I am seeking a Hebrew midwife." And she answered and said to me: "Art thou of Israel?" And I said to her: "Yea." And she said: "And who is it that bringeth forth in the cave?" And I said: "She that is espoused to me." And she said to me: "Is she not thy wife?" And I said to her: "It is Mary who was brought up in the Temple of the Lord, and she was allotted to me to wife, and she is not my wife, but hath conceived by the Holy Spirit." And the midwife said to him: "Is this true?" And Joseph said to her: "Come and see." And the midwife went with him. And they stood in the place where the cave was, and behold a bright cloud overshadowed the cave. And the midwife said: "My soul is magnified to-day, because my eyes have seen strange things (mysteries); for Salvation is born to Israel." And suddenly the cloud withdrew from the cave, and there appeared a great light in the cave, so that their eyes could not bear it. And gradually the light withdrew until the babe was seen. . . .

JESUS IN THE APOCRYPHAL GOSPELS

.

We need not pursue the contents of this writing further. The extracts already quoted and the summaries given will suffice to illustrate the unhistorical character of the matter that has not been derived directly from the canonical Gospels. The entire representation of Mary as living in the Temple is pure fiction and is historically impossible. And the same remark applies to other features.¹

¹ The mention of the "cave" at Bethlehem may, of course, rest upon sound tradition.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Yet the Prot-evangelium is the oldest and most important of these writings; it was used by the compilers of pseudo-Matthew, the Nativity of Mary, the History of Joseph the Carpenter, and the Arabic Gospel of the Infancy; and, compared with some of these latter, is sober and restrained in its representation. Thus, take the following from pseudo-Matthew¹—

And it came to pass that after the return of Jesus from Egypt, when He was in Galilee and now entered on the fourth year of his age, one Sabbath day He played with the children by the bed of the Jordan. When, therefore, He had sat down, Jesus made himself seven pools with mud, to each of which He made little channels through which, at His command, He brought water from a stream into a pool, and sent it back again. Then one of these children, a son of the devil, with envious mind, shut up the channels which supplied water to the pools, and overthrew what Jesus had made. Then said Jesus unto him: "Woe unto thee, son of death, son of Satan! Dost thou destroy the works which I have wrought?" And straightway he who had done this died. Then, with a quarrelsome voice, the parents of the dead cried against Mary and Joseph, saying to them: "Your son hath cursed our son and he is dead." When Joseph and Mary heard they came at once to Jesus, on account of the complaint of the parents of the boy and the crowd of Jews. But Joseph secretly said to Mary: "I dare not speak to

¹ Ch. XXVI.

JESUS IN THE APOCRYPHAL GOSPELS

Him ; but do thou admonish Him and say, Why hast thou raised against us the enmity of the people, and why do we bear the painful enmity of men ? ” And when His mother had come to Him she asked Him, saying : “ My Lord, what hath he done that he should die ? ” But He said : “ He was worthy of death, because he destroyed the works which I had wrought.” Therefore His mother besought Him, saying : “ Do not, my Lord, because they all rise against us.” And He, not willing that His mother should be grieved, spurned the body of the dead with His right foot, and said to him : “ Arise, O son of iniquity ; for thou art not worthy to enter into the rest of my Father, because thou hast destroyed the works which I have wrought.” Then he who was dead arose and departed. But Jesus, at His own command, brought the water into the pools through the water channels.

As has been already pointed out, the late compilation known as The Arabic Gospel of the Infancy is full of marvels in connexion with incidents of Our Lord’s childhood and youth. One extract will suffice to illustrate the character of these stories, which need not be traced in their further development.

Another day the Lord Jesus went out into the street, and seeing some boys who had met to play, He followed them ; but the boys hid themselves from Him. Therefore when the Lord Jesus had come to the door of a certain house and saw the women who stood there, He asked them whither the boys had gone.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

And when they told Him that there was nobody there, the Lord Jesus said again : " What are these whom ye see in the vault ? " They answered that they were kids of three years old. And the Lord Jesus cried aloud and said : " Come out here, O kids, to your shepherd ! " Then the boys came out, having the form of kids, and began to skip about Him. When they saw it the women wondered greatly, and, being seized with fear, they suppliantly and in haste adored the Lord Jesus, saying : " O our Lord Jesus, Son of Mary, Thou art indeed the good Shepherd of Israel : have pity on thy handmaids who stand before Thee and never doubted ; for, O our Lord, Thou hast come to heal and not to destroy." But when the Lord Jesus had answered that the children of Israel were like Ethiopians among the nations, the women said : " Thou, Lord, knowest all things, and nothing is hidden from Thee ; but now, we pray Thee, and from Thy kindness, we ask, that Thou wouldst restore these boys Thy servants to their former condition." The Lord Jesus therefore said : " Come boys, let us go and play." And immediately, while the women stood there, the kids were changed into boys (Ch. xl).

.

A study of the whole of this literature only serves to enhance the impression of essential truthfulness produced by the sober and restrained narratives of the canonical Gospels. In the latter we feel we are moving within the boundaries of real history, reflected in a genuine popular tradition. The whole matter may fitly be summed up in the words of Findlay¹—

JESUS IN THE APOCRYPHAL GOSPELS

“ A comparison of the Apocryphal Gospels with those of the Canon makes the pre-eminence of the latter incontestably clear, and shews that as sources of Christ’s life, the former, for all practical purposes, may be neglected. The simple beauty and verisimilitude of the picture of Jesus in the four Gospels stand out in strong relief when viewed in the light of the artificial and legendary stories, which characterize most of the Apocryphal Gospels. The proverbial simplicity of truth receives a striking commentary when (for example) the miracles of the Canonical Gospels are compared with those of the Apocryphal writings. The former, for the most part, are instinct with ethical purpose and significance, and are felt to be the natural and unforced expression of the sublime personality of Jesus ; the latter are largely theatrical exhibitions without ethical content. In them ‘ we find no worthy conception of the laws of providential interference ; they are wrought to supply personal wants, or to gratify private feelings, and often are positively immoral ’ (Westcott). In a few of the Gospels which show signs of independence, there may be here and there a trace of primitive and trustworthy tradition ; but all such details, which have a reasonable claim to be considered authentic, do not sensibly increase the sum of our knowledge about Christ. The conclusion, based on the comparison of the Apocryphal with the Canonical Gospels, is amply warranted, that in rejecting the former and choosing the latter as authoritative Scriptures the Church showed a feeling for what was original and authentic.”¹

¹ Op. cit. ibid. (p. 672).

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

¹ The Jewish legends about our Lord's birth and life have a certain affinity with the Apocryphal Gospels. See Appendix I.

CHAPTER VII

THE EVIDENCE OF THE OTHER NEW TESTAMENT WRITINGS, AND THE EARLIEST CHRISTIAN TRADITION (OUTSIDE THE GOSPELS) RESPECTING THE BIRTH OF JESUS

I

WHAT is the relation between the incidents of Jesus' birth, as recorded in the First and Third Gospels, and the rest of the New Testament? It is in the argument deduced from the alleged "silence" of these books that the stronghold of the opposition is to be found.

It is asserted that the incidents of the Nativity-Narratives entirely lack confirmation from the evidence of the rest of the New Testament. Not only are these books silent as to the main point—the Virgin Birth at Bethlehem—but much of their evidence cannot be harmonized with the alleged "facts." The Virgin Birth is ignored by St. Mark, St. John, and St. Paul, both in the construction of the primitive biography of Christ, as well as in the Christology. If it be conceded that the argument from silence may be in danger of being over-pressed, yet it does "seem strange that comprehensive and systematic thinkers, like John and Paul, could construct their doctrines of the transcendence and authority of Christ without distinct reference to so important a fact as His supernatural birth.”¹ The explanation of this silence is easy. The Virgin Birth formed no part of the Apostolic preaching, and the fact that there is no reference to it in the Acts of the Apostles shews how trustworthy as a historian St. Luke is. In the early chapters of the Acts he professes to give us the substance of the early Apostolic missionary preaching. The Virgin Birth formed no part of this. Therefore, no reference to it occurs in the Acts, though the same writer devotes the opening chapters of his Gospel to expounding the circumstances of Jesus’ birth. The same consideration will explain St. Mark’s silence. The Second Gospel begins with the opening of Our Lord’s public ministry, following His baptism. No account whatever is given of His birth, because this was not dealt with in the Apostolic preaching, and the Second Gospel is a compilation based, no doubt, upon the sermons of St. Peter. This preaching, it must be remembered, was determined by the character, inherent in the apostleship, of bearing personal witness to certain facts. Dr. Headlam well remarks²—

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

“ St. Mark’s Gospel is based upon the preaching of the Apostles, the witness that they gave of the things they had seen and known from the time of the baptism of John, and in all probability it was on the particular witness of St. Peter that it mainly rested. Now he could not be a witness as regards the birth, and therefore it would not be part of his normal teaching ; and it is significant that St. Luke himself recognized these limits when describing the election of Matthias and the qualifications of an Apostle."

¹ Sweet, Birth and Infancy of Jesus Christ, p. 227.

² The Miracles of the New Testament, p. 279.

EVIDENCE OF THE BIRTH OF JESUS

It is certainly significant that no account whatever is given in the Second Gospel of the birth of Jesus. It is clear that the supernatural birth was not emphasized at first. The explicit teaching about it, and the emphasis laid upon it, came later, and then only as part of a larger belief in the Incarnation. But the fact that the secret of Jesus' birth was not at first published to the world harmonizes perfectly with the character of the Nativity-Narratives. The story there enshrined, though unmistakably Jewish in its setting and form, would be especially difficult to explain to Jews. And yet it is impossible to attribute its growth to heathen influence. Its Jewish colouring, its primitive Christology, its reserve and restraint, forbid such a hypothesis. Its comparatively late appearance and primitive character can only be reconciled by the explanation that it is based upon facts which were for long treasured within a narrow circle in close contact with Our Lord, and which were only gradually divulged to the Church. And the instinct which dictated this course was a sound one. The supernatural birth is not the foundation of, but in a sense an incident in, faith in the supernatural personality of Jesus. It is because, on other grounds, we believe in the supernatural character of Jesus that we can believe in His supernatural birth. The purpose of the Second Gospel is to shew from the public ministry of Jesus, culminating in the death and Resurrection, that Jesus was the Son of God ; and in this it faithfully reflected the early Apostolic preaching. It is easy to put a wrong construction upon St. Mark's silence. As has been pertinently remarked¹—

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

“ That Mark began his Gospel at the Baptism, is certainly no evidence that the life of Jesus began then. Jesus, of a truth, did not enter the world as a grown-up man. Mark's silence proves absolutely nothing about the youth of Jesus, or else it proves that He had none. If the belief that Jesus was born of Joseph and Mary was an essential element in the primitive Gospel, why did Mark not state it as such ? His silence militates as strongly against the critical view as against the historical view. If Jesus was naturally born of Joseph and Mary, and became by a divine election and baptism the Son of God, it was as wonderful and deserving of record as the miraculous birth.

“ As a matter of fact, Mark's silence has no bearing upon this question . . . ”

But if it be conceded that St. Mark's silence has no bearing upon the determination of the question, one way or the other, what is to be said as to the indirect evidence afforded by his Gospel narrative? Is the representation there given congruous with a miraculous birth? It is, of course, admitted that, according to popular belief, Jesus was, during His lifetime and for some time afterwards, regarded as the son, by natural generation, of Joseph and Mary. And the disciples—or some of them—shared the popular belief at first (cf. John i. 45: We have found him of whom Moses in the Law and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph). It is certainly curious, however, that in St. Mark's Gospel (vi. 2 f.) the people of Nazareth ("his own country") are represented as unwilling to welcome Him as a teacher, and saying: Whence hath this man these things? And what is the wisdom that is given unto this man, and what mean such mighty works wrought by his hands? Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, and brother of James, and Joses, and Judas, and Simon? And are not his sisters with us?

¹ Sweet, op. cit., p. 228.

EVIDENCE OF THE BIRTH OF JESUS

The designation of Jesus as "Son of Mary" is decidedly remarkable and unusual. It is probably contemptuous. In the parallel passage in St. Matthew (xiii. 55) it is significantly modified (Is not his mother called Mary?), and replaced in the parallel passage in St. Luke by Is not this the son of Joseph? (Luke iv. 22). In Rabbinic Literature, where the designation "ben" or "bar" (= "son") is used, it is in reference to the father. The writer cannot recall any instance of a man being called in Rabbinic the "son" of his mother, in this way. There is, of course, the case of Joab and his brethren in the Old Testament, who are constantly spoken of as "sons of Zeruah" (she being David's sister, according to the Chronicler). This is sufficiently interesting to call for special remark (cf., e.g., the art. Zeruah in Hastings' DB), and may be a survival of the old custom of reckoning kinship through the female line. More significant, perhaps, is the case of Jeroboam, who, though he receives the patronymic "ben Nebat," is said to have been the son of a widow woman (cf. 1 Kings xi. 26)—this description being probably a contemptuous one. In the Lucianic recension, the "widow woman" becomes γυνή πύρνη. It looks as though the calumny regarding Jesus' birth, which was afterwards amplified, in Jewish writings, had already begun to grow up in Nazareth. Does not this point to some peculiar circumstances regarding His birth which had become known in a distorted form to some people at Nazareth? And may not this be explained by Mary's hasty marriage to Joseph, which coincided with the journey from Nazareth to Bethlehem?

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

A good deal of stress has been laid by radical criticism upon the incident described in Mark iii. 21. [And when his friends (or kinsmen) heard it they went out to lay hold on him: for they said, He is beside himself.]

"Who these kinsmen were (says Schmiedel)¹ we learn from Mark iii. 31 f.—Matt. xii. 46 f.—Luke viii. 19 f.; they were his mother and his brethren. For the passage is the continuation of Mark iii. 21 ; they set out from Nazareth and reach Jesus immediately after he has had a controversy with the scribes (Mark iii. 22-30). Even though we choose to regard it as possible that Mary had kept a life-long silence with her son regarding the secret of his birth, and by this assumption to deprive Mark iii. 33 (who is my mother, etc.), of the force assigned to it.¹ . . . Mark iii. 21 (he is beside himself) would still be decisive ; had Mary known of the supernatural origin of Jesus, as set forth in Luke i. 35, could anything have induced her to say He is beside himself ? The 'family secret' of which apologists speak did not exist."

¹ EB, col. 2955 (art. Mary).

EVIDENCE OF THE BIRTH OF JESUS

Such dogmatism sounds very formidable ; but it reveals an extremely defective sense of what is psychologically possible. With real insight and fine truthfulness, St. Luke's Nativity-Narrative insists that Mary failed to understand the significance of the startling events connected with Our Lord's birth and development : And they understood not the saying which he spake unto them (Luke ii. 50) ; Mary kept all these things, pondering them in her heart. The Virgin-Mother had much to learn all through her life regarding her mysterious Son ; nor is there any reason to suppose that the ¹ This "hard saying," Schmiedel insists, "would have been an impossibility if Jesus had possessed the consciousness that his mother had been deemed by God worthy of a position so exalted and so singular" as to be the instrument of the Incarnation by the Virgin Birth.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

exalted moments of her strange experiences regarding Him were consistently maintained.¹ As Sweet well remarks,² radical criticism often makes the mistake of "reading the evidence backward."

"Mary laboured to the end of Jesus' life under certain mental limitations. She occupied the Old Testament view-point exhibited in the Infancy document, and never passed beyond it until after the death of Jesus. There was nothing in the circumstances of Jesus' birth to lead her to expect in Him anything but the fulfilment of the theocratic hopes of the circle in which she moved.³ Her conduct towards Jesus (cf. John ii. 3, 5) cannot be better explained than by the supposition that her expectations in Him were disappointed. She was a thorough Hebrew, and when she saw her son coming into conflict with the authorities of her nation and turning aside to the narrow pathway that led towards inevitable death, she was troubled, perplexed, grieved, and driven by her painful solicitude to acts that were indiscreet and unpleasant (Mark iii. 31; Matt. xii. 47). There is absolutely nothing here that argues that Mary did not know the incidents recorded by Matthew and Luke—certainly nothing that has any weight compared with the positive reasons for believing that Mary was herself the authority upon which Luke based his story."

¹ See further on this point, Appended Notes (8), p. 228.

² Op. cit., p. 199 f.

³ i.e., of the pious minority of Quietists referred to above (pp. 102 f., 105 f.).

EVIDENCE OF THE BIRTH OF JESUS

Further, the story of the Wedding at Cana (John ii. 3-5), which is no doubt based upon authentic tradition, implies an attitude of expectation on the part of Mary that her Son would be likely to do something wonderful—her hopes had not yet been dashed by the unhappy conflict with the Scribes and Pharisees. There was nothing in the previous years of uneventful life at Nazareth to justify such evident Messianic expectations; but the remembrance of the wonderful events of the Birth may well have done so when Jesus had just begun His public ministry.

The evidence of the Fourth Gospel in relation to Our Lord's birth has been differently interpreted. Schmiedel¹ states the case as follows—

“ Jesus in this Gospel says a great deal not only about his previous existence with God, but also about his entrance into this earthly life in virtue of his mission by his Father. In this connexion it would assuredly have been of great importance to have been able to say, in support of his exalted dignity, that he had been born in an altogether exceptional way. Instead of this, what do we find? That in John i. 45, Philip, in vi. 42, the Jews² call him the son of Joseph, that in i. 45 (Jesus of Nazareth), vii. 41 f. (Doth the Christ come out of Galilee? Hath not the

¹ E B, col. 2958-9 (art. Mary).

² Is not this Jesus the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? How doth he now say, I am come down out of heaven?

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Scripture said that the Christ cometh of the seed of David, and from Bethlehem the village where David was ?), vii. 52 (Search and see that out of Galilee ariseth no prophet), Nazareth is spoken of as his birthplace, whilst yet Bethlehem is said to be of necessity the birthplace of the Messiah ; and Jesus says nothing to the contrary. It is acknowledged that in the Fourth Gospel the objections of the Jews against Jesus continually proceed upon misunderstandings. But here the misunderstanding plainly lies not in any error as to the actual birthplace of Jesus or as to the manner of his birth, but only in the opinion that these facts exclude the Messiahship of Jesus."

This is a style of criticism against which it is necessary to enter a protest. It may be described as a form of hyper-criticism which is itself uncritical. If the writer of the Fourth Gospel had written in the way Schmiedel thinks he ought to have written, and had put into the mouth of Jesus assertions "that he had been born in an altogether exceptional way," he would at once have branded his work as an unhistorical romance. Because he did not commit himself to so palpable a fiction, we are asked to believe that he did not accept the Virgin Birth as a fact ! We are also assured that in the Fourth Gospel "Nazareth is spoken of as his (Jesus') birthplace." Not one of the passages adduced supports this assertion. In fact, not a single passage in the New Testament categorically states that Nazareth was Jesus' birthplace. Jesus is spoken of as "the Nazarene" and as "coming from Galilee"—which statements are, of course, historically true—and it is a mere inference from such expressions to assume that He was born in Galilee. No doubt, the Jews were unaware that He had been born at Bethlehem; but the readers of the Fourth Gospel were certainly not. And when the Evangelist quotes the Jews as objecting, Hath not the Scripture said that the Christ cometh of the seed of David, and from Bethlehem the village where David was? he is merely indulging, after his manner, in a species of tragic irony.

EVIDENCE OF THE BIRTH OF JESUS

As I have said elsewhere¹—

"It would be strange indeed if the writer of the Fourth Gospel possessed no knowledge of the tradition of the Virgin Birth of Jesus as embodied in Matt. i.-ii., and Luke i.-ii. Silence in this case would presumably imply not ignorance but tacit acceptance. Unless the tradition were contradicted either explicitly or tacitly, the presumption in such a case is that it was accepted. It is certainly significant that the Prologue to the Fourth Gospel, which occupies a similar place to that of the Genealogy in the First Gospel, traces the origin of the Logos which became incarnate in Christ to the inner life of God. What the genealogists attempted to do partially is here carried out fundamentally and finally. The question arises, Is the Prologue intended to be a tacit correction of the Matthaean and Lukan nativity-traditions? Or are these, at any rate as regards their central feature—the Virgin Birth—silently accepted and supplemented by the statement of fuller and deeper truth? The latter alternative accords with the characteristic manner and method of the Fourth Evangelist. So far from excluding the possibility of the Virgin Birth, it may be argued that the Prologue presupposes it. In view of the fact that the tradition of the Virgin Birth must already have been current in certain Christian circles, and can hardly have been unknown to the writer of the Johannine Prologue, this conclusion becomes at least highly probable. If the writer had conceived of the method of the Incarnation of the pre-existent Logos as being otherwise, we should at least have expected to find some hint or suggestion to that effect. In the only verse, however, in the Prologue where any allusion to birth occurs (John i. 13), the reference is certainly not incompatible with the tradition of the Virgin Birth, but may be regarded as lending it, if anything, some presumptive support.”

¹ Hastings' D C G, II, 805 (art. Virgin Birth).

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

The passage of the Prologue just referred to is worth a closer examination. It runs (John i. 12–14) as follows—

(12) But as many as received him, to them gave he the right to become children of God, even to them that believe on his name ; (13) which were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will

EVIDENCE OF THE BIRTH OF JESUS

of man, but of God. (14) And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory as of the only begotten (μονογενοῦς) of the Father) full of grace and truth. Carr (Exp. T. xviii. 522, 1907), contends that μονογενοῦς in v. 14, "from its position in the Prologue, and from its form as a composite of γίγνεσθαι, must refer not to the eternal generation of the Son of God, but to the human birth of the Son of Man." There is also the remarkable reading, known to Justin, Irenaeus, Tertullian, and perhaps Hippolytus, according to which v. 13 directly refers to Christ's supernatural birth: who (sing.) was born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. Here, natural generation by a human father is denied and excluded in the most categorical manner. Even if this reading be not accepted, it is a pertinent question to ask: "Why the elaboration of the theme, above all why the θελήματος ἀνδρός ('will of man'), unless he (the writer of the Prologue) has in mind the supernatural birth of the Logos as a kind of pattern or model of the birth of the children of God? As He was born into the world by supernatural conception, not through the process of human generation, so they were born out of the world into the higher life by a spiritual process, symbolized indeed by generation, but transcending it."¹

¹ Willoughby C. Allen in The Interpreter, Oct., 1905 (article Birth of Christ in the New Testament), p. 57 f. (see the whole admirable article); cf. also J. H. Bardsley in The Interpreter, July, 1908; and see further Appended Notes (9), where the textual evidence of John i. 13 is set forth.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Another point to be remembered is this. Behind the Fourth Gospel, as behind the Synoptists, there lies a background of controversy. The writers are interested in maintaining certain truths which were the object of attack when they wrote. St. Matthew's Nativity-Narrative, as has already been pointed out, is dominated by apologetic motives of this kind. But by the time when the Fourth Gospel was written .

“ the miraculous birth was simply an item in a larger controversy. . . . No one denied the miraculous birth except as an item in a larger denial. The controversy in which John was absorbed concerned the reality of the Incarnation. There was no controversy as to the Virgin Birth considered in itself. No one who accepted the Incarnation denied or thought of denying the miraculous birth. All who accepted the Incarnation accepted, as a matter of course, the miraculous birth. When, therefore, John wrote the sentence, The Word became flesh, he gave in his allegiance to that entire systematic interpretation of Christ with which, in the mind of the early Church, the miraculous birth was essentially bound up.”¹

We have already seen how precarious the argument from silence is in the case of the Second and Fourth Gospels ; and this applies, with even stronger force, to St. Paul's letters. Dr. Headlam¹ rightly insists that—“ his letters were in all cases occasional documents. They assume the ordinary Christian preaching and the ordinary knowledge of the Gospel history. They were not written to provide future ages with a complete idea of what Christianity was, and in a sense it must be considered accidental that any particular point of early Christianity is found in them. Supposing that 1 Corinthians had not survived, it would have been the customary thing to argue that S. Paul knew nothing at all about the Lord's Supper. S. Paul's Christological doctrine was of such a character that it would be natural for him to believe that Our Lord was born in a remarkable manner.”

¹ Sweet, op. cit., p. 230 f.

EVIDENCE OF THE BIRTH OF JESUS

No stress can properly be laid either way on such phrases as born of a woman, born under the Law (Gal. iv. 4) ; born of the seed of David according to the flesh (Rom. i. 3).² As the First Gospel most emphatically affirms the two propositions : (a) that Jesus belonged to the family of David, and (b) that He was virgin-born ; it is obvious that such a phrase may include belief in the Virgin Birth. In any case, it cannot be insisted upon either for

¹ Miracles of the New Testament, p. 280.

² It is noticeable, however, that in each of these cases St. Paul uses the out-of-the-way γενόμενον instead of the natural word γεγεννημένον. This would harmonize well with the feeling that there was something extraordinary and supernatural about the birth, which led to its being spoken of in unusual terms.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

or against the belief. What is more important is St. Paul's doctrine of the Second Adam from heaven as applied to Christ. As has already been pointed out, there seems to be a real link of connexion between this doctrine and the Lukan genealogy, which traces the genealogical line of Our Lord back to Adam (Son) of God. The thought seems to be that just as the first Adam was Son of God by a direct creative act, without the intervention of a human father, so the Second Adam was created by the direct intervention of God, through a human mother it is true—and, therefore, He was truly human (cf. Gal. iv. 4, "made of a woman")—but without the intervention of a human father. That such a conception should be embodied in the Lukan genealogy is significant. Whence did St. Luke derive it if not from St. Paul? He was St. Paul's companion and disciple. If the disciple used this doctrine in connexion with the Virgin Birth, it is hard to believe that the master was ignorant of the latter. The most that can be urged is that in the Pauline Christology no emphasis was laid on the dogma of the Virgin Birth.

The obviously mythological figure in Rev. xii. of the woman "arrayed with the sun" who "was delivered of a son," if it is derived from an earlier Jewish source, shews that the Babylonian myth was not unfamiliar among Apocalyptic circles within Judaism. It can hardly, however, have influenced or suggested the Jewish-Christian tradition of the Virgin Birth. "But," to use Mr. Allen's words, "it is worth while raising the question whether the author of the book (of Revelation) did not incorporate this section with direct reference to the tradition of the supernatural birth of Christ, with which he must, therefore, have been acquainted.”¹ This passage may, however, be left conveniently for discussion in the next chapter.

EVIDENCE OF THE BIRTH OF JESUS

II

It is significant that the assertion of the fact of the Virgin Birth appeared in the earliest form of the Roman Creed : *Who was born of the Holy Ghost from the Virgin Mary.*² This early form of the Western Creed is placed by Kattenbusch as far back as the year A.D. 100, and in any case is not much later. St. Ignatius (martyred between the years A.D. 107 and 116) writes early in the second century to the Ephesians as follows—

For our God, Jesus the Christ, was conceived in the womb by Mary according to a dispensation, of the seed of David but also of the Holy Ghost ; and He was born and was baptized that by His passion He might cleanse water. And hidden from the prince of this world were the virginity of Mary and her childbearing and likewise also the death of the Lord—three mysteries to be cried aloud—which were wrought in the silence of God. (ad. Ephes. xviii. 19.)

It is noteworthy that the Ignatian Letters shew

¹ The Interpreter, Feb., 1905, p. 193.

² Qui natus est de Spiritu Sancto ex Maria Virgine.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

no trace of the influence of the amplified Infancy-Narratives embodied in the Apocryphal Gospels ; the writer apparently depends upon the birth-narrative of the First Gospel, or something very much like it, and is acquainted with teaching similar in type to that of the Prologue of the Fourth Gospel. The pre-existent Word of God became incarnate through a human and virginal birth. Another early second-century witness to the Virgin Birth is the Apologist Aristides, a Syriac version of whose work was discovered in 1889. The Apology was addressed, according to the Syriac version, to the Roman Emperor Antoninus Pius (A.D. 138-161). In chapter ii. the following occurs—

The Christians, then, reckon the beginning of their religion from Jesus the Messiah, and He is named the Son of God Most High ; and it is said that God came down from heaven, and from a Hebrew virgin took and clothed Himself with flesh, and in a daughter of man there dwelt the Son of God. This is taught in the Gospel, as it is called, which a short while ago was preached among them.

Another famous second-century Apologist, Justin Martyr, refers at length to the Virgin Birth in the Apology (see esp. i. 33) and in The Dialogue with Trypho ; and the doctrinal fact is emphasized also by Irenaeus, Hippolytus, and Tertullian, not to speak of later writers. It is thus clear that, to borrow Harnack's words, " by the middle or probably soon after the beginning of the second century this belief had become an established part of the Church tradition.”¹ As against Jew and Ebionite, on the one side, it was adduced to prove Our Lord’s divine origin, and, on the other, against the Gnostic, to safeguard His true humanity. It is a striking fact that the Virgin Birth is a well-established part of the Christian tradition as far back as we can trace it, and was embedded in the earliest form of the Church’s creeds. It was accepted by the great mass of the heretics, as well as by the orthodox.² No body of tradition was ever more cautious and conservative than the authoritative tradition of the Church. That the assertion of the Virgin Birth of Our Lord is so firmly entrenched in this citadel, points unmistakably to the fact that it came to the Church, on its first publication, with the highest possible credentials and authority, and, in consequence, was at once accepted, though it had formed no part of the original Apostolic preaching.

EVIDENCE OF THE BIRTH OF JESUS

¹ It is also referred to in the Ascension of Isaiah, XI. 1–15, and the recently discovered Odes of Solomon, XIX. 6–10, both writings probably of the early part of the second century A.D. See the passages cited and commented on by Headlam, op. cit., pp. 283 ff.

² The only important body of early Christians who rejected the Virgin Birth were certain Jewish Christians (not all), the Ebionites. They seem to have regarded Our Lord as the Messiah, in the restricted Jewish sense, and so asserted that He was only a man born of Joseph and Mary. This form of Jewish Christianity is not that reflected in the New Testament, but apparently a compromise between Pharisaic Judaism and Christianity. Cerinthus is also said to have maintained that Jesus was the son of Joseph and Mary.

CHAPTER VIII

THE ALLEGED PARALLELS FROM HEATHEN SOURCES

As early as the time of Justin Martyr (Trypho, lxvii.) the mythological tales of virgin birth were cited to discredit the Christian doctrine. "Amongst the Grecian fables," says Trypho, "it is asserted that Perseus was born of the virgin Danae; Jupiter, as they call him, coming down upon her in a shower of gold." Such tales are widespread. "We can no longer ignore the fact," says Mr. Estlin Carpenter, "that the idea of a wondrous birth without human fatherhood appears in a multitude of tales which can be traced literally round the world 'from China to Peru.'"¹ A large collection of these has been made in Hartland's Legend of Perseus. Students of comparative religion are sometimes apt to exaggerate resemblances which are small and to ignore profound and far-reaching differences. A comparison of the stories of virgin birth adduced from heathen sources serves to reveal how utterly unlike the Gospel-Narrative, both in form and spirit, these stories are. They belong to different worlds of thought and feeling. Thus, the legend of Perseus bears not the least resemblance to anything recorded of the birth and life of Jesus. Justin, in answer to Trypho, who brought forward the myth of Perseus as a heathen parallel to the story of the Virgin Birth of Our Lord, indignantly repudiates both the similarity and the connexion. "The Christian story is to him, he replies in substance, not only de facto historical and true in its essential points (while the pagan myths are mere Satanic counterfeits of it), but . . . the two stories differ toto coelo morally and spiritually."¹ In fact, the idea of a direct borrowing from Greek myth has largely been abandoned even by scholars who reject the story of Jesus' miraculous birth. Some link more closely connected with the historical antecedents must be found. Another hypothesis seeks to explain the Gospel-story by a comparison with the Greek fables which impute the physical origin of great men (heroes and benefactors) to the gods (not only to Zeus, but to Apollo, Mars, Mercury), and which doubtless are the expression of popular feeling that finds in splendid endowments and achievements something marvellous and inexplicable, on purely natural grounds. The soil for such beliefs in the popular feeling and consciousness of the pagan world was a fertile one. But this was far from being the case among the Jews, at any rate within historical times, and it is difficult to see how such ideas about the sons of the gods could have found entrance into primitive Christian circles—least of all, Jewish Christian circles.² If the feeling had operated within Christian or Jewish circles why were not the Apostles turned into demi-gods, and why was not a divine origin ascribed to such mighty figures as Moses and Elijah? Soltau, however, finds no difficulty in adducing as parallels to the Gospel-story the fables circulated by Alexander (alleged to be a son of Zeus) and the Emperor Augustus as to their divine origin. Augustus, we are told, availing himself of a popular superstition, especially rife among the Romans, which regarded the serpent as "the symbol of the Genius, the protecting spirit of the family,"

¹ The Bible in the XIXth Century, p. 490.

PARALLELS FROM HEATHEN SOURCES

¹ Thorburn, Evidences of Virgin Birth, p. 157.

² See the article Virgin Birth (by the writer) in Hastings' D C G, II, 807 f.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

"caused sacrifices to be offered everywhere to the Genius of the Emperor; (and) he was careful that the fable should be widely diffused, to the effect that his mother Atia was once, while asleep in the temple of Apollo, visited by the god in the form of a serpent, and that in the tenth month afterwards he himself was born . . .

"Was it to be wondered at, then, that kindred ideas grew up with regard to the origin of Christ also, and that they found credence? This, at any rate, is clear; the belief in the Virgin Birth of Jesus could not have originated in Palestine; anyhow it could never have taken its rise in Jewish circles."¹

As we have already seen that nothing is more certain than the Jewish-Christian origin and character of the Gospel Nativity-Narratives, we need not here do more than endorse Harnack's verdict that "the conjecture . . . that the idea of a birth from a virgin is a heathen myth, which was received by Christians, contradicts the entire earliest development of Christian tradition.”¹ Nor need we linger over the parallel derived from the story of the birth of the Buddha, which is as remote from any resemblance to the Gospel-story as can well be imagined. It is thus described²—

¹ Soltau, op. cit., p. 47.

PARALLELS FROM HEATHEN SOURCES

His mother before the conception retires to keep the fast, and in complete chastity sleeps surrounded by her women. Her husband is not there. As she sleeps she dreams a dream; it seems as if a white elephant enters her side. This is the conception.

It should be noted that there is no suggestion here that the mother was a virgin at the time. The more careful exponents of the scholarship which seeks to explain the Gospel-Narratives from the side of comparative religion see clearly that direct borrowing from heathen sources is out of the question. This group of scholars, which includes not only Gunkel and Gressmann but also Cheyne, insists on the Jewish-Christian character of the Gospel-Narratives. It is assumed that a folk-lore motif had already penetrated Jewish circles before the Christian period, and that a Jewish legend—really a heathen myth transformed and invested with a Jewish character—had grown up about the Messiah. The most recent exposition of this kind of treatment is that of Gressmann, which may here be examined.

¹ History of Dogma (E.T.), I, 100 note.

² See Sweet, op. cit., p. 162. See, further, Appended Notes (10), p. 231 f.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

As we have already seen, Gressmann¹ holds that the Gospel "legend" simply reflects a Jewish birth-legend of the Messiah which was dominated by the foundling motif. Whence was this derived?² The foundling motif is very common in folk-tales, sagas, and myths. One version of it, "which in a striking way approximates to the Christmas gospel," is extant in Plutarch's Isis and Osiris, Chapter xii: "which is particularly valuable for our purpose, because Plutarch is a contemporary of the Evangelists and therefore cannot be dependent upon them." Plutarch is aware of the celebration of the birth-festivals of Egyptian gods on the intercalary days at the end of the year, and in particular gives an account of the birth of Osiris: On the first (intercalary) day Osiris is born. Coincident with the birth a voice resounded from the (heavenly) height: "The Lord of all emerges into the light." Some, however, assert that a certain Pamyles in Thebes, while drawing water from the Temple of Zeus,³ heard a voice which commanded him to proclaim aloud: "The great King, the Benefactor, Osiris, is born." And when Kronos⁴ handed him (Osiris) over to him, he brought up Osiris, and therefore the Feast of Pamyles was celebrated in his honour, which is similar to the Phallus-feasts. Here, Plutarch sets before us two variations of the birth-legend of Osiris, the second

¹ Das Weihnachts-Evangelium, p. 17 ff.

² Op. cit., pp. 21 ff.

³ Zeus = the Egyptian god Amon, the principal god of Thebes.

⁴ = the Egyptian Geb, the father of Osiris.

PARALLELS FROM HEATHEN SOURCES

of which is rather more full. The situation implied is that the divine child is born in a marvellous manner. Then suddenly a heavenly voice sounds from the Temple of Zeus-Amon (according to the first account, from the heavenly height), and announces the birth, giving direction, at the same time, that the fact should be proclaimed, so that everyone's attention should be called to the matter. Pamylenos, who was occupied in drawing water—a task only allotted to slaves or servants of the lower order—can have been no priest. When, in his astonishment, he looks about, he becomes aware of the child's presence. He does not for one moment doubt that Kronos-Geb, the father of Osiris, has entrusted him with the care of the child. So he brings him up as his own, and announces the theophany that has been vouchsafed to him. The place where this happened is not expressly mentioned; Gressmann thinks it must have been on the banks of the Nile, near which the Theban Temple lay. The legend probably has as its foundation-motif the idea of a foundling set by the water. The differences between this legend and the assumed Messiah-legend are admitted to be formidable. This is accounted for (1) by the difference of background; in the Theban river-country it must be a drawer of water who lights on the foundling, while in the hill-country of Bethlehem, it is shepherds to whom this rôle must be assigned, and who find the child in a cave; (2) another difference is that in the Gospel-legend the infant is found wrapped in swaddling-clothes

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

(cf. also Ezek. xvi. 4), a custom which, apparently, was unknown to the Egyptians.

In spite of these differences, it is contended that there are striking agreements. Both accounts make the birth coincide with a proclamation by a heavenly voice ; in both accounts the child is called " Lord " (κύριος), and " Benefactor " (εὐεργέτης) approximates in meaning to " Saviour " (σωτήρ). In both accounts the heavenly command is taken up by the recipients, who are in each case poor people of the lower orders, in Plutarch a water-drawer, in St. Luke shepherds. The legend of Plutarch, it is claimed, confirms the analysis of the Lukan story by which an older form of the Messiah-legend is detected that narrates the wonderful birth of the Christ-child suddenly, without parents, in solitude far from human society and helpless, in a manger. But, by the coincident announcement of the angel, the shepherds who are in the open country, are informed of the event, and proceed to the manger. Since they know that the child is of divine origin and destined for great things, they not only make the divine announcement known, but take charge of the babe, give him milk to drink, and bring him up.

It will be noticed that the basis of comparison here with the Osiris-legend is a hypothetically reconstructed pre-Christian Jewish one. Not a particle of positive evidence is adduced for the existence of such a legend. In particular, the foundling idea is far to seek. If anything is fixed in Jewish popular notions about the Messiah, it is that he is to be born of a human mother who is known as such. This is as clear as it can possibly be in the Jewish legend of the birth of the Messiah which has already been quoted. Another condition which must have controlled any local tradition about Messiah's birth that may have grown up at Bethlehem is that the future King must be a scion of the House of David, that is to say, his father must be known to belong to the Davidic family. Otherwise, why should Bethlehem be the scene of his birth? In the light of these objections, it seems to us that the possibility of the growth, in such a connexion, of a foundling-legend vanishes.¹ Attempts have also been made to connect the birth-story of Jesus with the Mithraic birth-legend. The resemblance in certain respects between the religion of Mithra and of Christ was sufficiently striking to impress so early a Christian Father as Justin, who (Trypho, ch. lxx.) refers to the matter as follows—

PARALLELS FROM HEATHEN SOURCES

And when they who treat of the mysteries of Mithra say that he sprang from a rock, and call that place, where they say those that believe in him are initiated by him a cave, is it not certain that they have imitated that which was spoken by Daniel, that a stone was cut out of a great mountain without hands (Dan. ii. 34)? And likewise that which is spoken by Isaiah (Is. xxxiii. 13-20), all whose words they have endeavoured to imitate as exactly as possible? For the evil spirits have contrived to have the precepts concerning the practice of that which is just and right taught even by the priests of Mithra.

¹ We have already discussed the historical difficulties of this hypothesis in connexion with the rest of the Lukan Nativity-Narrative above (pp. 76 ff.).

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Again, in ch. lxxviii., Justin refers definitely to the caves of Mithra in speaking of the cave at Bethlehem where Our Lord, according to him, was born. The god Mithra, as is well known, was worshipped in caves or artificially made cave-chapels, and was spoken of as the "rock-born." It is difficult, however, to believe that a cave-chapel of Mithra existed near Bethlehem at so early a period as the first century B.C. The evidence does not suggest that the Mithra-cult was known in Syria till a long time subsequently. Yet the hypothesis apparently requires that we must assume the existence of a cave near Bethlehem, sacred to Mithra at a very early period; and that this was taken over into Jewish-Christian legend. This is incredible. Nor is an indirect influence of such a legend any more probable.

Cheyne¹ working on different lines, has made out a much stronger case for the introduction of mythical material into the Christian birth-stories. He emphatically rejects the view that the statement of Christ's Virgin Birth originated in a mistranslation of the Immanuel-prophecy (Is. vii. 14), or in a non-Jewish, heathen story, adopted by Gentile Christians—a story such as those which Mr. Hartland in his Perseus and Prof. Usener in his Weihnachtsfest have collected in abundance. The influence he postulates is, rather, Babylonian, and he discovers traces of it in the mythological figure of "the woman clothed with the sun" of Rev. xii., who seems to be regarded by the author of the passage as the mother of the Messiah.

¹ Bible Problems, Part II, esp. pp. 71 ff.

PARALLELS FROM HEATHEN SOURCES

He calls attention to the fact that "this strange and difficult narrative" (i.e., Rev. xii.)—

"makes no reference to the Messiah's father. This may be explained by the hypothesis that in the Oriental myth upon which this Jewish narrative is based, the mother alone was mentioned. For 'the woman clothed with the sun' evidently represents one of those heathen goddesses (e.g., Istar, Isis, Artemis) who were mothers, but not originally wives—in short 'virgins,' in the sense in which παρθένος was applied to the great mother-goddess of Asia Minor. It appears probable that in some of the early Jewish versions of the Oriental myth of the Divine Redeemer (which has not, so far as we know as yet, been preserved) the mother of the Holy Child was called a 'virgin,' for nothing is easier than for divine titles to pass from one religion to another, and for their original meaning to be forgotten. In other versions it is possible that the title adopted was 'the woman,' a term which may be directly traceable to Babylonia. For the former title we can with some confidence refer to the Septuagint rendering of ha-alma in Is. vii. 14 (ἡ παρθένος, whence the rendering in our version), which I know not how otherwise to explain, than as an allusion to a belief current among the translators' contemporaries, and for the latter to Rev. xii. 1 (by implication), and just possibly to a passage in the (Ethiopic) Book of Enoch (lxix. 29), where the oldest manuscript has, not 'Son of man,' but 'Son of woman.' " ¹

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Prof. Cheyne fortifies his hypothesis by another reference drawn from Babylonian literature. He cites the remarkable traditional story of the Babylonian King Sargon of Agade, who flourished about 3800 B.C.

" It is a legend of mythic origin, and represents the great king as having been born of a poor mother in secret, and as not knowing his father. There is reason to suspect that something similar was originally said by the Israelites of Moses, ² and would it be strange if a similar account were given of the birth of Jesus Christ, the second Moses ? " ³

In criticizing this theory, I may, perhaps, be allowed to repeat what I have said elsewhere ⁴—

" It is undoubtedly true that the Jewish Messianic idea bears traces of the influence of the universal myth of the World Redeemer. It is, indeed, when analysed critically, found to be largely a transformed and refined edition of the old material. The universal craving which found

¹ Op. cit., p. 81 f.

² See : E B, art. Moses, 3 with note 4.

³ Op. cit., p. 86.

⁴ Hastings' D C G, II, 808 (art. Virgin Birth).

PARALLELS FROM HEATHEN SOURCES

varying expression in the world-myth of the coming Deliverer assumed its highest and most spiritual phase in some forms of the Jewish Messianic belief. One feature of the widespread myth was the representation of the mother of the coming Deliverer. The mother plays an important rôle, but no father is mentioned. Here, in all probability, we must see a survival of the idea of the goddess-mother as distinct from the later one of the goddess-wife.¹ In Is. vii. 14, the goddess-mother, it would seem, has been transferred to earth, and has become simply the Israelitish woman who is to bear the wonderful child. The heathenish trappings have been entirely dropped."

As we have already seen,² in Rabbinical literature this idea seems to have survived in the various forms in which the conception of the Messiah's earthly pre-existence comes to expression.

(1) He is represented as leading a hidden life and then suddenly manifests himself (cf. Mt. xxiv. 27, 43, 44 ; John vii. 27). In the Midrash Ex. Rabbā, i., it is said that as Moses, the first deliverer, was reared at the court of Pharaoh so the future Deliverer will grow up in the Roman capital. Another Midrash says that the Messiah will suddenly be revealed to Israel in Rome.

(2) The Messiah is represented as born, but not yet revealed ;¹ cf. the well-known passage, Sanh. 98 b., where R. Joshua b. Levi is quoted as saying that the Messiah is already born and is living in concealment at the gates of Rome. According to the Targ. (Jerus) on Mic. iv. 8, the Messiah is on the earth, but is still in concealment because of the sins of the people.

¹ Cf. Barton, A Sketch of Semitic Origins, Ch. III.

² See above p. 82 f.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

(3) The Messiah is represented as having been born at some time in the past (according to one account born at Bethlehem on the day the Temple was destroyed ; according to another, born in the days of King David, and now dwelling at Rome).²

In the curious story³ of the Messiah's birth quoted by Lightfoot (Horae on Mt. ii. 1) the birth of the Messiah (whose name is Menahem, son of Hezekiah) is connected with Bethlehem and the destruction of the Temple. His mother's name is not given, she being described simply as " the mother of Menahem." At Bethlehem she is found with her infant son by the Jew who has been mysteriously apprised of the Messiah's birth. The Jew leaves, and " after some days returns to that city, and says to her, ' How does the little infant ? ' " And she said : " From the time you ¹ Cf. Justin Martyr (Dial c. Tryph. VIII) : But Christ, if he is come, and is anywhere, is unknown ; nor does he know himself, nor can he be endued with any power till Elijah shall come and anoint him, and make him manifest to all men ; cf. also XLIX.

² Cf. : J E, VIII, 511, where the above details are given.

³ Cited in full above (p. 81 f).

PARALLELS FROM HEATHEN SOURCES

saw me last spirits and tempests came, and snatched him away out of my hands."

In all these forms of the myth, it is to be observed that the mother of the Redeemer is nowhere called a "virgin." Where the mention of a father does not occur, this feature may be due to the prominence of the mother in an earlier social stage, surviving in the form of the goddess-mother; an idea which later assumed the form of the Messiah's being concealed and unknown, and manifesting Himself suddenly. It is also to be observed that in Rev. xii. the woman is a heavenly being; in other words, the conception in this passage is nearer the primitive myth than it is in Is. vii. 14. It is difficult to imagine how the representation in Rev. xii. can have suggested the idea of the virgin birth, though it is easy to see that the prominence assigned to the Virgin-Mother of Jesus in the Christian story may have influenced the author of Revelation in selecting so crude a piece of mythological material for the purposes of his book. In other words, it was the Gospel story which suggested the selection of the mythical representation in Rev. xii. It would be easier to suppose that the LXX. of Is. vii. 14 had given rise to the story of the Virgin Birth than the mythical figure in Revelation.

In order to overcome this difficulty, Prof. Cheyne is driven to conjecture "that in some of the early Jewish versions of the Oriental myth of the Divine Redeemer (which has not, so far as we know as yet, been preserved) the mother of the Holy Child was called a ' virgin.' " And, further, it is necessary to suppose that παρθένος (" virgin "), which in its original application (e.g., to the great mother-goddess of Asia Minor) meant one who was not bound by the marriage tie (and, therefore, connoted anything but the virginity of Lk. i. 34) in the process of transition to the conjectured Jewish version of the myth, lost its original connotation, and was interpreted in the strict sense ; " for nothing is easier than for Divine titles to pass from one religion to another, and for their original meaning to be forgotten."

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

It is very difficult to believe that any " Jewish versions of the Oriental myth " ever existed which spoke of the Messiah's Mother as a " virgin." Virginity, in the strict sense of the term, was never esteemed among Jews proper as a higher state than marriage ;¹ nor do the Gospel Nativity-Stories suggest that such an idea had any influence in creating them. The home of Joseph, Mary, and Jesus, as pictured in these narratives, was a Jewish home, permeated with the atmosphere of conjugal love ; the picture does not harmonize with an ascetic ideal of virginity. But the ascetic ideal of virginity is one thing ; the idea of a virgin-mother is another. It is incredible that Jews can have taken over this idea from heathen sources, especially with such associations clinging to it as those described by Prof. Cheyne. That the very idea of a virgin-mother was abhorrent to Jews is reflected clearly in St. Matthew's narrative; and we have already seen that Jewish literature shews not the slightest trace of the idea of the Messiah's mother being a virgin.¹ It is true that the LXX. of Is. vii. 14 describes the mother of the future Deliverer as a παρθένος ("virgin"). But there is no evidence that this text ever received a Messianic application among Jews, apart from Matt. i. 23; and there it was suggested by the event, and not vice versa. What, then, was the significance of the LXX. ἡ παρθένος in Is. vii. 14 to Greek-speaking Jewish readers? Two explanations are possible: either (1) the translators, in using the term, intended to enhance the miraculous character of the sign, given by God Himself, as the prophet announced, to Ahaz—contrary to all natural laws God Himself will bring it about that a virgin shall conceive and bear a son; or (2) it may simply mean (and this, perhaps, is more natural) that some definite person (known to Ahaz and the prophet), who is now a virgin, shall conceive, etc., the implication being that she will have ceased to be a virgin before the conception and birth of a son. In face of the silence of the entire Jewish literature—apart from the Jewish-Christian narratives—and the positive and negative evidence against the currency of such an idea—it is surely precarious to see evidence in this isolated text of a belief, prevalent among the Jewish-Greek contemporaries of the LXX. translators, in the Virgin Birth of the Messiah.

¹ The half-Jewish sect of the Essenes, it is true, eschewed marriage among themselves. But would even they have lent any countenance to the idea of a virgin-mother ?

PARALLELS FROM HEATHEN SOURCES

¹ For Philo's idea of virgin birth, cf. Appended Notes (11), pp. 232 ff.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

On the general question of heathen analogies to the Virgin Birth of Our Lord, it should not be forgotten that, while many of these stories and myths can only be described as "the shameless glorifying of sensual desire," which "could only provoke in the primitive Christian consciousness the deepest abhorrence,"¹ yet, in some, a religious motive is discernible. This element seems to be present in the stories told of the birth of Egyptian kings. In the early period, the kings of the Fifth and Sixth Dynasties called themselves "sons" of the sun-god. In the case of Amon-Hotep III (of the Eighteenth Dynasty) we are told that the god Amon himself descended from heaven and stood beside the virgin who should become a mother—

"Amon-Hotep," he is made to say, "is the name of the son who is in thy womb. He shall grow up according to the words that proceed out of thy mouth. He shall exercise sovereignty and righteousness in this land unto its very end. My soul is in him (and) he shall wear the twofold crown of royalty, ruling the two worlds like the sun for ever."²

"This," says Dr. J. Estlin Carpenter, "is only the natural sequel of the language in which again and again the Egyptian kings are described as filially related to a paternal god." On the whole question, some weighty words of Professor Sanday may well be pondered—

¹ Dr. Weiss, quoted by Knowling, Our Lord's Virgin Birth, p. 42 f.

² Sayce, Religions of Ancient Egypt and Babylonia, p. 49, cited by J. Estlin Carpenter, op. cit., p. 491.

PARALLELS FROM HEATHEN SOURCES

"If we believe that the course of human ideas, however mixed in their character—as all human things are mixed—is yet part of a single development, and that development presided over by a Providence which at once imparts to it unity and prescribes its goal—those who believe this may well see in the fantastic outgrowth of myth and legend something not wholly undesigned or wholly unconnected with the Great Event which was to be, but rather a dim unconscious preparation for that Event, a groping towards it of the human spirit, a prophetic instinct gradually moulding the forms of thought in which it was to find expression."¹

It is, however, all-important to remember that the Gospel-Narratives belong to the sphere of history, and were produced under the limitations that condition the record of historic facts. The creations of the mythopoeic fancy flourish in a different atmosphere. "They are part of a common stock of imaginative material reproduced without purpose or authority from age to age and land to land, destitute of historic significance."²

¹ Hastings' D B, II, 647 (art. Jesus Christ).

² J. Estlin Carpenter, op. cit., p. 490. "Let any reader contrast the extravagant description, the high-sounding epithets, the cosmic transactions of the myths, with the story of the Gospels—the humble maiden, the carpenter,

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

A careful student, after a survey of the whole question, sums up as follows: "After a laborious and occasionally wearisome study of the evidence offered and the analogies urged," he says, he is "convinced that heathenism knows nothing of virgin births. Supernatural births it has without number, but never from a virgin in the New Testament sense and never without physical generation, except in a few isolated instances of magical births on the part of women who had not the slightest claim to be called virgins." In all recorded instances, so far as the writer has been able to examine them, "if the mother was a virgin before conception took place, she could not make that claim afterwards. The supernatural conception of Christ, therefore, was unique in several particulars: (1) Christ's conception was in order to incarnation—heathen wonder-births were the result of incarnation. (2) The story combines a miraculous birth with a pure spiritualistic monotheism. Christ's birth was due to the creative agency of the unseen God—without the usual human mediation. (3) His mother was at the time of His conception and remained until after His birth a virgin. In short, the conception of Jesus was as unique as the person thus brought into the world."¹ the inn stable, the simple language, the definite dates and locations—and ask himself whether it is possible to believe that the Gospel-story is an adaptation of the myth." (Sweet, op. cit., p. 183.)

¹ Sweet, op. cit., p. 188.

CHAPTER IX

CONCLUSION

WE are now in a position to sum up the conclusions that have been reached in the previous chapters, and to attempt, briefly, to estimate their religious significance.

(1) The Historic Fact

If the account that has been given of the character and genesis of these narratives be even approximately correct, what room is left for the operation within them of heathen superstitious ideas? However much Jews at various times have been influenced by their pagan neighbours, in the sphere of religion, and especially in their conceptions of God, they¹ are the last persons ever to have been affected by pagan superstitions. Towards such, and towards all the associations of idolatry in all its forms, they took small pains to disguise their aversion and contempt, as witness the Maccabean revolt and the conflicts with the Roman Government on the question of worship of the Emperors.

Yet we are asked by Soltau to believe that "the idea of the supernatural descent of Augustus" (embodied in the fable that his mother, while asleep in the Temple of Apollo, was visited by the God in the form of a serpent, and later gave birth to

¹ i.e., the post-Maccabean Jews of Palestine.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Augustus) was "applied . . . to the case of Jesus."¹ Soltau, indeed, concedes that "the belief in the Virgin Birth of Jesus could not have originated in Palestine; anyhow it could never have taken its rise in Jewish circles":² and in this view he is supported by Schmiedel and Usener. Consequently he is driven to regard the story of the Virgin Birth as an "insertion" in the original narrative, of "Hellenistic origin."³ The difficulties that beset this theory of "insertion" have already been indicated. How is it that such "insertions" should have taken so characteristic a Jewish form? This, at any rate, must be the work of Jews. Moreover, why should such alien elements have crystallized themselves in just the most markedly Jewish parts of the New Testament, while they are passed over in silence elsewhere?

Gunkel, indeed, fully admits the Jewish-Christian character of the whole of the narrative of St. Luke, and boldly argues that the idea of the Virgin Birth of the Messiah must have become a Christological dogma in Jewish circles before the time of Jesus, in the same way as the Messiah's birth at Bethlehem and of the family of David had become a fixed popular Jewish belief; and that this was transferred to the history of Jesus.⁴ But, in support of this statement, not a scrap of positive evidence

¹ Op. cit., p. 49.

² Op. cit., p. 47 f.

³ Op. cit., p. 49.

⁴ Zum religionsgeschichtlichen Verständniss des neuen Testaments (Göttingen, 1903), p. 69.

CONCLUSION

is given.¹ If such were the case, why is the Virgin Birth of the Messiah never alluded to in the main body of the Gospels in connexion with the other popular beliefs (such as his birth at Bethlehem and of the family of David) that are mentioned? In fact, so far from it being a popular or even familiar belief among the Jews, it may be inferred with practical certainty from St. Matthew's narrative that the story of the Virgin Birth was a stumbling-block to Jewish readers which it required special apologetic efforts to overcome. The natural and instinctive Jewish attitude towards such a story was represented by a section of the later Ebionites, who, while admitting other claims on behalf of Jesus, refused to believe this. Nor can it be said that either Gressmann's or Cheyne's attempt to postulate a pre-Christian Jewish birth-legend of the Messiah which would account for the New Testament Nativity-Narratives has been successful.

The conclusion is forced upon us, therefore, that if the story of the Virgin Birth is a legend, it must have grown up within the Jewish-Christian community of Palestine, and must represent a primitive Christological dogma expressing the idea of the perfect moral and spiritual purity of Jesus as Son of God. The Christian consciousness, it might be urged, working on such a passage as Thou art my Son ; this day have I begotten Thee (Ps. ii. 7), together with the Scriptural promise of the fullness of the spirit that should rest upon the Messiah (Is. xi. 2), may have been led to transfer these ideas to the physical beginnings of Jesus' life.¹ But, in the absence of any analogous development in the Christian consciousness elsewhere this is hard to believe. Why did the Christological process assume just this form and in this (a priori most unlikely) quarter? The impulse must have been given from without. But, unless the idea came from heathen sources—which to us seems inconceivable in so strictly Jewish a circle—then it must have grown out of a conviction, cherished at first within a limited Palestinian circle of believers, that the traditional belief among them was based upon facts of which some members of this community had been the original depositories and witnesses.

¹ For Badham's attempt to supply the deficiency (in The Academy for 8th June, 1895), see Appended Notes (2), p. 218 f.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

Dr. Estlin Carpenter² agrees with Lobstein in thinking that the story of Our Lord's Virgin Birth is a pious creation of "early Christian imagination." We have already seen how the pious Christian imagination works in our study of the Apocryphal Gospels. "These shew," says Dr. Plummer,¹ "what pitiful stuff the imagination of early Christians could produce, even when the canonical Gospels were there as their models. All these classes of fiction (both heathen and Christian) warn us that we must seek some other source for the Gospel-Narrative other than the fertile imagination of some Gentile or Jewish Christian whose curiosity led him to speculate upon a mysterious subject. We should have had something very different, both in details and in tone, if there had been no better source than this."

¹ This is substantially the position taken up by Lobstein in his essay on The Virgin Birth of Christ (Williams & Norgate, 1903). Lobstein contends that "the conception of the miraculous birth of Christ is the fruit of religious feeling, the echo of Christian experience, the poetic and popular expression of an affirmation of faith" (p. 96). Lobstein also denies pagan influence, and maintains that the conception "has its roots deep down in Israel's religion transformed by the new faith" (p. 75, cf. p. 69 f.). This writer's treatment of the subject, by its critical sobriety and religious feeling, contrasts favourably with Soltau's arbitrary and confused exposition.

² Op. cit., p. 493.

CONCLUSION

When subjected to the criteria properly applicable to it—and when weighed in the light of the considerations advanced above—such a tradition, it seems to us, has high claims to historical credibility. The alternative explanations only serve to raise more difficulties than they profess to solve.

Assuming, then, the historic fact of the Virgin Birth, and frankly accepting its "miraculous" character, we are not thereby driven to suppose that the miracle is incongruous with the laws of nature. The essential truth embodied in the Christian tradition has been admirably stated by Professor Briggs²—

"The virgin conception of Jesus . . . is not to be interpreted as if it were a miracle in violation of the laws of nature,¹ but rather as brought about by God Himself present in theophany. The conception of Jesus in the womb of the Virgin Mary differs from all other conceptions of children by their mothers in that there was no human father. . . . The place of the human father was taken by God Himself ; not that God appeared in theophany in human form to beget the child, after the analogy of the mythologies of the ethnic religions, but that God in a theophany in an extraordinary way, unrevealed to us, impregnates the Virgin Mary with the holy seed. The words of the angel imply a theophanic presence ; for though it might be urged that the coming of the Spirit upon her was an invisible coming, after the analogy of many passages of the Old Testament, yet the parallel statement that the Divine power overshadowed her cannot be so interpreted. For it not only in itself represents that the Divine power covered her with a shadow, but this is to be thought of, after the uniform usage of Scripture, as a bright cloud of glory, hovering over her, resting upon her, enveloping her with a halo of Divinity, in the moment when the Divine energy enabled her to conceive the child Jesus."

¹ Hastings' D C G, I, 75 (art. Annunciation).

² Messiah of the Gospels, p. 49 f.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

On the view that the narratives embody authentic history, it is obvious that they must either directly or indirectly depend upon the authority of Joseph and Mary themselves. And this is confirmed by their general character. It has often been noted that the narrative in the First Gospel is written from the point of view of Joseph, while St. Luke's reflects that of Mary. This is a very striking feature, and it is extraordinarily difficult to suppose that it is the result of invention or pure imagination. Especially so in the case of St. Luke's narrative. As Dr. Plummer remarks¹—

¹ For the theory of Parthenogenesis, in this connexion, see Appended Notes (12), p. 235 f.

CONCLUSION

“ It required more delicacy to tell the story of the Virgin Birth from Mary's side than from Joseph's; and this greater delicacy is forthcoming. And it is all the more conspicuous because St. Luke's narrative is the richer in details. We conclude, therefore, that St. Luke has good authority for what he has told us, viz., an authority well acquainted with the facts. For if he was incapable of imagining what he has related, equally incapable was his informant. The narrative which he has handed on to us is what it is because in the main it sets forth what is true.”

St. Luke's narrative may have been derived directly from Mary herself, or, more probably, from a document which depends ultimately upon the authority of the Virgin. Many scholars have pointed out the touches of a woman's hand in the narrative. “ The notes of time (Luke i. 26, 36, 56)

¹ Ibid.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

are specially feminine.”¹ Dr. Sanday² indeed has argued that the narrative came not only from a woman, but through a woman, and has suggested that Joanna, the wife of Chuza—steward to Herod Antipas (Luke viii. 2-3, xxiv. 10; cf. xxiii. 49, and Acts i. 14),—may have been the person through whom the information passed from Mary to St. Luke. It is quite possible that St. Luke received this information orally from such a person, and that it formed the basis of the prose setting in which are embedded the poems of the Nativity.³ These poems, however, cannot have been composed by St. Luke. As has been argued in Chapter III, they are to be regarded as translations from Hebrew originals. We may confidently accept Dr. Briggs’ verdict, who says (New Light, p. 165): “Making every allowance for the poetic form, style, and conception, these poems are sources of the highest value, and of the first degree of historic importance. . . . They give us information as to the Infancy of Jesus Christ and as to the Virgin Mother, which is necessary to complete the story of their lives and to give us a complete understanding of

¹ “The colouring of a woman’s memory and a woman’s view is unmistakable in the separate features of this history” (Lange). “There is a womanly spirit in the whole narrative which seems inconsistent with the transmission from man to man” (Ramsay, Was Christ born at Bethlehem? p. 88).

² Exp. Times, April, 1903, p. 297.

³ Or such information may, of course, have been embodied in a document which St. Luke used in writing his prose-narrative. This, perhaps, is more probable.

CONCLUSION

their character." Dr. Briggs detects seven pieces of poetry in the Lukan narrative, none of which is, he thinks, in its present form complete. They are in the nature of incomplete extracts.

These poems are: (1) The Annunciation to Zacharias (Luke i. 13-17), a trimeter poem, in the original Hebrew, in two strophes of different lengths, evidently incomplete in the translation; (2) the Annunciation to Mary (Luke i. 28, 30-33, 35-37, 38), four pieces of trimeter poetry of different lengths, also incomplete; (3) the Annunciation to the Shepherds (Luke ii. 10-12, 14), two pieces of trimeter poetry, evidently extracts; (4) the Song of Elizabeth (Luke i. 42-45), and (5) the Song of the Virgin (the Magnificat) (Luke i. 46-55), both trimeter poems, perhaps also incomplete; (6) the Song of Zacharias (the Benedictus) Luke i. 68-79), a pentameter poem in two strophes, probably, relatively, the most complete of all, but, perhaps, an extract; and (7) the Song of Simeon (Nunc Dimittis) (Luke ii. 29-32, 34-35), a trimeter poem, probably incomplete.¹

It will be noticed that six of these seven pieces are of the same form (trimeter poems), while one (the Benedictus) is in pentameter form, which agrees with the extract in Matt. i. 20-21 (the Annunciation to Joseph). May these extracts go back to two long poems, one written in trimeter, the other in pentameter form, each giving a poetic account of the Birth of the Baptist and the Birth and Infancy of Jesus? We cannot say.¹ At any rate, it seems clear that these poems were before St. Luke in written form when he wrote his Nativity-Narrative. Their composition must have taken place well before the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, "either in the Christian congregation of Jerusalem, or the Christian community in Galilee, therefore by early Christian poets who had access to the family of Jesus, certainly to His brother James,² the head of the Jerusalem Church, and possibly also to the Virgin-Mother . . . and to others who could speak as eye-witnesses and ear-witnesses of (some of) these matters embodied in verse."³ When the contents of the poems are examined, we find that they reflect an early type of Messianic belief and expectation, and a primitive Christology which point to a very early date. It is evident that they emanate from a circle which was deeply interested not only in Jesus but in the Baptist. We may infer, with some certainty, that they grew up in the earliest generation of Jewish-Christians, who had largely been drawn from those who were originally followers of the Baptist. It was from these elements that the community was formed in

¹ Cf. Briggs, New Light, p. 162 f.; Messiah of the Gospels, pp. 41-63.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

¹ Dr. Briggs thinks it probable that "we have to think of two original poems of this kind, the one chiefly used by Matthew, the other chiefly used by Luke" (New Light, p. 164).

² "His brother James": For the Brethren of the Lord, see Appended Notes (13), pp. 236 ff.

³ Ibid.

CONCLUSION

which these poems must have first taken shape. We may fix, approximately, on the decade A.D. 40–50 as the time within which they first assumed literary shape. But it is evident, of course, that the tradition on which they are based is much older.

The poems breathe “the spirit of the Messianic hope before it had received the rude and crushing blow involved in the rejection of the Messiah.”¹ This is specially noteworthy in the poems which belong to the Baptist-cycle. The Forerunner is to make ready a people prepared for the Lord (Luke i. 17). God hath holpen His servant, that He might remember mercy (as He spake unto our fathers) toward Abraham and his seed for ever (i. 54–55); He hath visited and wrought redemption for His people, And raised up a horn of salvation for us in the House of His servant David, As he spake by the mouth of the holy ones, His prophets of old: Salvation from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us; To shew mercy toward our Fathers, and to remember His holy covenant; The oath which He sware unto Abraham, our father (i. 68–71). The same Messianic hope is also reflected in the other songs. The child is to have the throne of his father David, and is to reign over the house of Jacob for ever (i. 32–33). Now, this “is not the sort of language that early Jewish Christians would have invented after the rejection of Christ.” It reflects the earlier type of Messianic hope of which we have already spoken. The early chapters of the Acts shew us that the primitive Jerusalem Church still hoped and worked for the winning of the Jewish people as a whole to the acceptance of Jesus as the Messiah, and not without some prospects of success.¹ It is in such an atmosphere that a little circle could have cherished the tradition of earlier Messianic hopes reflected in the stories of the Birth and Infancy of the Baptist and of Jesus. It is true that this cycle of tradition did not form part of the Apostolic preaching, which laid all the emphasis on the death and Resurrection of Our Lord. But, as we have already seen, the very idea of Apostleship limited the teaching given by the Apostles to matters on which they could give personal testimony as eye-witnesses. What it is more important to observe is that, as in the early chapters of the Acts, the conception of the person of Jesus in St. Luke's Nativity-Narrative is purely Messianic. He is to be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest (Luke i. 32); He is to be the exalted Messiah; "but the doctrine of the Incarnation, strictly speaking, is not more to be found here than in the early speeches of the Acts."² The Church had not yet sounded the depths, or fully developed the implications, of her doctrine of Christ's Person.

¹ Gore Dissertations, p. 16.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

It has already been suggested that the poems may have been influenced by other Jewish models, that in some cases the diction may have been borrowed from formulas familiar to Jews and sanctioned by liturgical usage (cf., e.g., the affinities between the Kaddish and the angelic song in the Annunciation to the Shepherds).

¹ Cf. Acts vi. 7. See on the whole question of the early Jerusalem Church, Hamilton's The People of God, Vol. II, esp. Chapters I—III.

² Gore, Dissertations, p. 18.

CONCLUSION

A feature of the Nativity-Narratives that creates difficulty for some minds and tends to discredit the Gospel accounts by investing them with an air of unreality is the angelic appearances. This question has been admirably discussed by Dr. Gore, who points out¹ that "to suppose such angelic appearances . . . to be imaginative outward representations of what were in fact real but merely inward communications of the 'divine word' to human souls, is both a possible course and one which is quite consistent with accepting the narrative as substantially historical and true." The prophets who speak of the "word of the Lord" as "coming to them" imply by such language "the reality of substantive divine communications to man of a purely inward sort." Such an inward communication is recorded to have been made to Elizabeth (Luke i. 41-45); "and the angelic appearances to Joseph recorded by St. Matthew (Matt. i. 20, ii. 13, 19) are merely inward occurrences (i.e., they are intimations conveyed to his mind in sleep)." "No one . . . who knows human nature can doubt that such inward communications could be easily transformed by the imagination into outward forms," and especially in poetry. Zacharias may have received, in answer to earnest prayer (Luke i. 15) such an inward divine intimation as to what was to befall him, especially on so solemn an occasion as that described by St. Luke; and this may easily "have represented itself to his imagination in the outward form and voice of an angel." And similar explanations may be given of Mary's vision and that of the Shepherds.

¹ Op. cit., p. 22 f.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

As we have seen, the evidence suggests that the secret of Jesus' birth was not at first generally made known.¹ There were obvious reasons why this should have been the case during the lifetime of the Virgin. Yet some of the facts which invested both the birth of the Baptist and of Jesus with such an extraordinary significance must have been known from the first to an inner circle. These facts and occurrences seem gradually to have crystallized themselves into the tradition embodied in the poems that are utilized in the Lukan narrative, which may not have assumed final literary shape (in the original Hebrew form) till the decade A.D. 40-50.

It has already been pointed out² that in all probability, one strong motive at work in the Matthean account was to meet Jewish calumny regarding Jesus' birth. This may have come to a head after the narrative embodied in St. Luke's Gospel had become known, though its beginnings may have been even earlier. If this view is correct, the Matthean narrative must have been composed later than the Lukan (though it depends upon a similar early cycle of tradition) which shows no such strong apologetic interest, and contains more original material.

¹ Mr. Arthur Wright (Synopsis,² p. xlii.) believes the story of the Virgin Birth "to have been kept back until conflict with heresy brought it forward."

² Cf. Ch. II above.

CONCLUSION

(2) Doctrine and Fact

When we ask ourselves, What is the doctrinal significance of the fact, and what is its theological value? we are raising questions of special delicacy and difficulty, which are acutely felt by many Christians to-day. In some quarters, where the Incarnation is accepted as a fact, it is assumed as almost axiomatic that the Nativity-Narratives of the Gospels have been discredited by historical criticism, and may safely be rejected. It is also suggested that the alleged fact of the Virgin Birth of Jesus has no doctrinal value. In the present discussion, an attempt has been made, patiently and frankly, to test the historical credibility of the narratives, and we have deliberately come to the conclusion that the Gospel-story possesses high claims to historicity. The argument is addressed to those who accept the Incarnation as a fact. It cannot be expected that those who do not approach the narratives with the presuppositions involved in the orthodox Christian belief as to the Person of Christ will be convinced by the Gospel evidence. "The historical evidence for Our Lord's birth of a virgin," says Dr. Gore, "is in itself strong and cogent. But it is not such as to compel belief.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

There are ways to dissolve its force.”¹ Such ways, as we have seen, have been found by historical criticism in abundance ; and this criticism has not been without effect even on devout believers in the Incarnation. To quote Dr. Gore again : “ to produce belief there is needed—in this as in almost all other questions of historical fact—besides cogent evidence, also a perception of the meaning and naturalness, under the circumstances, of the event to which evidence is borne. To clinch the historical evidence for Our Lord’s Virgin Birth there is needed the sense that, being what He was, His human birth could hardly have been otherwise than is implied in the virginity of His mother.”²

The Doctrinal Value and Significance of the Fact

What is the doctrinal value and significance of the fact ? To this question orthodox Christian theology has a quite definite answer. We may not be able to say that the Incarnation could only have happened in the way described in the Gospels (i.e., by Our Lord’s birth from a Virgin-Mother). But we can say that such a way is congruous with the Church’s belief in Our Lord’s pre-existence as a Divine Person ; that it safeguards at once His Divinity and His humanity, and also His uniqueness ; and that there are grave difficulties in reconciling these positions of Christian theology with the theory of ordinary generation from two human parents.

¹ Op. cit., p. 64

² Ibid.

CONCLUSION

Dr. Briggs has expressed the matter trenchantly as follows¹—

“The Christ of the Bible and the Church is not merely a divinely inhabited man, but the God-man. The deity and the humanity are inseparable, and eternally united in one and the same divine person. Mary the virgin, the mother of Jesus, was the mother of God because she gave birth not simply to a man, but God who had become man in her womb when she conceived him by the Holy Ghost. Christ is not God in the sense that he is the elder brother of an indefinite number of other gods; but in the sense that he is, and always will be, the one only unique Son of the Father, the second person of the Holy Trinity. . . . A birth by human generation would give us only an individual man, inhabited by the Son of God, and so two distinct persons, the second person of the Trinity, and the person of the man Jesus. That cannot in any way be reconciled with the faith of the Bible, or the Church. It is simply the revival of ancient errors rejected by the Church once for all and for ever nearly fifteen centuries ago.”

With this, a statement by Dr. Bethune-Baker may be compared. He says²—

“I have frequently, as a student of Christian

¹ Art. : The Virgin Birth of Our Lord (American Journ. of Theol., XII, 202 (1908)).

² The Miracle of Christianity (1914), p. 10 f.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

doctrine, been asked by devout believers in the Godhead of our Lord, to whom the belief in His miraculous Birth was a part of the accepted tradition which, as far as they knew, had no influence on their main belief, to tell them what place in the whole doctrine of the Incarnation I conceived that that particular miracle occupied ; how the manner of His birth was related to the doctrine of His Person. To this question I have not been able to give many of the answers which have been given or suggested by great divines of the Church in the past. Some of the most familiar answers seem to me to be either essentially docetic, in failing to recognize adequately our Lord's full manhood, or based on biological conceptions which we know now were mistaken. . . I have only been able to answer to the effect that the doctrine as I understand it requires continuity with the human race, which is secured by birth from a woman—heredity through the mother—and at the same time a 'break in the continuity of the ordinary, natural process, a fresh departure, a new Divine action, the introduction of a new Power into the world, which is secured by conception, without human paternity, by the direct operation of God.' And, further, I have added that the Catholic doctrine presupposes what in our technical language we call the pre-existence of Him who was born as man into the world, and that I cannot myself conceive how a child born of two parents in what we call the ordinary course of nature could be what I believe our Lord to be—the fullest expression of Divine Personality that is possible under the conditions of genuinely human life, the embodiment of God in man. Accordingly, when I reason out the doctrine of the Incarnation, I am, for my part, almost constrained to hold belief in a miraculous birth alongside with my belief in Him of whose Personality I think that doctrine a true interpretation. The one belief is congruous with the other. That is the kind of answer I can give.”

CONCLUSION

With this quite admirable answer, Dr. Bethune-Baker goes on to say he is not satisfied—

“ It is, of course, not possible to shew that the miraculous Birth was the occasion or original cause of the doctrine ; and it is not enough to shew that belief in it has been a means of producing belief in the doctrine in later times. If we are to insist on the retention of the belief, we must shew how it is vital to the doctrine.”

It is true, of course, that it cannot be shewn that “ the miraculous Birth was the occasion or original cause ” of the doctrine of the Incarnation. In its relation to the doctrine of the Incarnation, belief in the Virgin Birth of Our Lord is rather in the nature of effect than original cause or occasion. Christians first believed in the Incarnation, and, as a consequence of this belief, were prepared to accept the fact of the Virgin Birth. As soon as the doctrine of the Incarnation was reasoned out it was necessary to provide an answer to the question "How was the Incarnation effected?" In the absence of a trustworthy tradition, the Church might have been obliged to answer that she did not know. In fact, she has given the answer embodied in the earliest forms of her baptismal Creed, and confirmed by a tradition of facts, which has every appearance of being primitive and trustworthy, that "Jesus Christ was conceived by the Holy Spirit from the Virgin Mary." The only alternative to acceptance of this tradition of facts is to suppose that Jesus was the son, by natural generation, of Joseph and Mary. But such a view, on Dr. Bethune-Baker's own shewing, is incompatible with the Catholic doctrine of Our Lord's Person. The connection, then, between the Catholic doctrine of the Incarnation and the fact of Our Lord's Virgin Birth is a vital one. The doctrinal value of the Virgin Birth certainly depends on the Incarnation. And the Church has always believed, ever since the time when she formulated her Creed, that the reality of the Incarnation is safeguarded by belief in the Virgin Birth as a fact.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

It is true that in the Apostolic age the doctrine of Christ's Person had not been fully thought out. To work out its implications time and experience were required. But it is fairly clear that the divinely guided instinct of the Church, at a comparatively early stage in the development of doctrine, realized the doctrinal significance of the Virgin Birth. Otherwise, how are we to explain the presence of the clause asserting it in the earliest forms of the baptismal Creed? Indeed, there, as Dr. Bethune Baker is careful to point out, it symbolizes the whole doctrine of the Incarnation.¹ Are we, then, justified in denuding it of historical significance as an assertion of fact, and regarding it as symbolical of the Incarnation generally? In other words, ought those who cannot accept the Virgin Birth as a fact, but yet believe in the Incarnation, to be encouraged to recite the clause in public worship as an expression of belief in the Incarnation generally? For this position, Dr. Bethune Baker puts in a plea, and a teacher whom we all revere, Dr. Sanday, claims that it is legitimate to interpret the clause of the Creed in a symbolical way. He says—

CONCLUSION

“ In regard to the Birth of our Lord, I would say that I believe most emphatically in his supernatural Birth; but I cannot so easily bring myself to think that His Birth was (as I should regard it) unnatural. This is just a case where I think that the Gospels use symbolical language. I can endorse entirely the substantial meaning of that verse of St. Luke (i. 35) ‘ The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Most High shall overshadow thee : wherefore also that which is to be born shall be called holy, the Son of God.' This is deeply metaphorical and symbolical, and carries us into regions where thought is baffled. I do not doubt that the Birth of our Lord was sanctified in every physical respect in the most perfect manner conceivable. The coming of the Only Begotten into the world could not but be attended by every circumstance of holiness. Whatever the Virgin Birth can spiritually mean for us is guaranteed by the fact that the Holy Babe was Divine. Is it not enough to affirm this with all our heart, and soul, and be silent as to anything beyond? "

¹ “ There can be no doubt whatever that these are the only words in the Creed which express the doctrine. Without them, the Creed altogether fails to express the conviction of one to whom the doctrine of the Incarnation is the breath of his religious life ” (op. cit., p. 12).

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

This position, it seems to us, amounts to a surrender of the Gospel account of Our Lord's Birth as history; the accounts are either not intended by their writers to be taken literally or are legendary creations. Neither of these views is without grave difficulties, which need not further be discussed here.¹ It is clear that the Church cannot adopt such a position. She cannot surrender what she has regarded, ever since she received it on what seemed to be the highest authority, as a statement of fact defining the method of the Incarnation. The assertion of the fact, apart from an antecedent belief in the reality of the Incarnation, would be of no doctrinal value whatever. But the Church has always believed that this clause of her creed, asserting the fact, safeguards the main doctrine.

¹ See a criticism by Dr. Headlam in the C Q R, Oct., 1914, pp. 20 ff. ("Nature Miracles and the Virgin Birth").

CONCLUSION

How can she possibly abandon this position without endangering the doctrine of the Incarnation itself? Neither on historical nor doctrinal grounds, it seems to us, would she be justified in doing so.

It is no doubt possible for individual believers, who have lived for a long time in an atmosphere of belief which has been created by age-long teaching of the full Catholic doctrine, to rest in a position which asserts the reality of the Incarnation apart from the Virgin Birth. But for the Church to adopt such a position authoritatively would surely be disastrous. Sooner or later, the results would inevitably work themselves out in a "reduced" Christology, and a "reduced" Christianity.¹

¹ "The best proof of all of the inadequacy of this half-way position is that, historically, it has never been able to maintain itself. It did not do so in the school of Schleiermacher, the great bulk of whose disciples—Neander, Ullmann, Tholuck, and the rest—went on to the full acknowledgment of the Virgin Birth. It did not do so in the school represented by Keim, which mostly sank down to the level of pure humanitarianism" (Orr, The Virgin Birth of Christ, p. 206). See, further, Appended Notes (14), p. 239 f.

APPENDICES

APPENDIX I

THE BIRTH AND EARLY YEARS OF JESUS IN JEWISH LEGEND

[THE most complete treatment of the subject is by Dr. S. Krauss: Das Leben Jesu nach jüdischen Quellen (Berlin, 1902); cf. also the art. Jesus (in Jewish Legend) by the same scholar in J E, vii., pp. 170–173. A useful treatise, available in English, is the volume by Laible and Dalman, translated by A. W. Streane, entitled Jesus Christ in the Talmud, Midrash, Zohar, etc. (Cambridge, 1893), referred to below as “Laible-Dalman”; cf. also Herford Christianity in Talmud and Midrash.]

Jewish legends in connexion with Jesus can be traced in: (a) New Testament Apocryphal works (such as The Acts of Pilate), and in such anti-Jewish polemical treatises as Justin's Dial. with Trypho and Origen's Centra Celsum; (b) in the Talmud and Midrash; and (c) in the mediaeval Jewish polemical life of Jesus known as Toledoth Jesu.

Many of the Jewish stories read like perversions of New Testament statements. Dr. Krauss¹ says—

“Many of the legends have a theological background. For polemical purposes, it was necessary for the Jews to insist on the illegitimacy of Jesus as against the Davidic descent claimed by the Christian Church. Magic may have been ascribed him over against the miracles recorded in the Gospels; and the degrading fate both on earth and hereafter of which the legends speak may be simply directed against the ideas of the assumption and resurrection of Jesus.”

¹ J E, vii. 170. Dr. Krauss is, of course, a distinguished Jew, as well as a great scholar.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

A very early passage in the Rabbinical Literature, a passage in the Mishna (Yeb. iv. 13), if, as most scholars think, it refers to Jesus, will be the earliest Jewish evidence which speaks of Our Lord's Birth as illegitimate. It runs as follows—

Simeon ben 'Azzai said : " I found in Jerusalem a book of genealogies ; therein was written that ' So-and-so is a bastard (mamzēr) of a married woman.' "

Simeon ben 'Azzai was a pupil and contemporary of Akiba (first quarter of the second century A.D.). The " Book of Genealogies " here referred to seems to have been a roll compiled after the destruction of Jerusalem, which contained the genealogical data that had survived the wreck of earlier documents.¹ It was no doubt added to from time to time. It is quite conceivable that such a notice had been inserted in this roll before the time of ben 'Azzai. If it refers to Jesus, as Krauss, Derenbourg, and Laible think (though Dalman doubts it), it is probably a Jewish perversion suggested by such a genealogy and narrative as that of the First Gospel. It is noteworthy that the Jews who are represented as in conflict with Our Lord in the Gospels never questioned His legitimate birth, but took Him to be the son (by natural generation) of Joseph and Mary. In the Apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus, part of the charge levelled against Jesus by the elders of the Jews is that He " was born of fornication " (i.e., apparently was the child of an illicit union between Joseph and Mary). In Origen's contra Celsum, Celsus also alleges illegitimate birth, but now it is the result of seduction, the seducer being a soldier by the name of Panthera. In the Rabbinical sources the name of the paramour is variously given as Panthârê, Pandîrâ and Panderâ, and Jesus is also, in this literature, sometimes called Ben Štada (בן סטדא).

¹ Herod I is said to have destroyed all official pedigrees extant in his time. No doubt many such documents perished later in the ruin of Jerusalem.

APPENDIX I

Panthêrā and Panthîrā are regarded by some scholars as a corrupted form of παρθένος ("virgin"). In this case, "Jesus, son of Panthera" is a Jewish perversion of "Jesus, son of the Virgin." Pandîrā (Panderā) may = πάνδαρος, which was a Greek proper name. Or it may be a variation intended to suggest πάνθηρ. Laible (op. cit., pp. 22 f.) regards these names as originally appellatives which ultimately became proper names when their origin and significance had "disappeared from men's consciousness." "Pandēra, or, as it is sometimes written, Panțēra, Panțēre, answers exactly to the Greek πάνθηρ. What then was intended to be expressed by the designation 'Son of the panther,' from which there came later 'Son of Panther' ? We answer, 'Son of the panther' meant 'Son of sensuality.'"¹ Krauss considers Pandîrā and its variants a form of πόρνος. Štada has also received various explanations. One suggestion is that it is a parody of štara = "star"—then "Ben Štada" suggests "son of a harlot" for "son of a star" (ben Štara; cf. Numb. xxiv. 17); or the same result will be reached if Štada be regarded as a perversion of ἀστήρ. In the Palestinian Talmud (Sanh. vii. 25 d., top) the name is given as Ben Šôtēda, which suggests "son of the harlot." Might not this, it has been suggested, be a parody of Sotērā = σωτήρ; then Ben Štada may be regarded as a perversion of a title of the Virgin, "mother of the Saviour." Krauss thinks Štada is derived from the Greek σωτᾶδεια, a term which came to mean "lust," "sensuality," from the character of the poetry which owed its origin to the poet Sotades, who flourished in the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus.

How confused the later Jewish tradition is may also

¹ According to ancient belief the panther chooses his mate among other kinds of animals. The offspring of panther and lioness is the leopard (cf. also T B Kiddushin 70 a.). The son of the panther is the same as an illegitimate connexion, a bastard. Cf. John viii. 41, where the Jews say to Jesus: "We were not born of fornication."

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

be seen from the fact that the Talmud also gives expression to the view that Pappus ben Judah, a contemporary of Aḳiba (first part of second cent., A.D.) and Miriam the hairdresser were the parents of Jesus. The only reason for connecting Pappus with the story of Jesus was because his wife was named Miriam ("the women's hairdresser")¹ and she was known to be an adulteress.

The one most important of the Talmudic passages, illustrating what has been said above, may now be given. It is from Shabbath 104 b., and runs as follows—

The son of Ṣṭada was son of Pandēra. Rab Hisda (died A.D. 309) said: "The husband was Ṣṭada, the lover Pandēra." (Another said): "The husband was Pappus ben Judah; Ṣṭada was his mother; (or) his mother was Miriam the women's hairdresser; as they would say at Pumbēditha, Sēṭāth da (i.e., 'she was unfaithful') to her husband."

The implications of this text may be more clearly set out in a paraphrase: "He was not the son of Ṣṭada, but he was the son of Pandēra. Rab Hisda said: 'The husband of Jesus' mother was Ṣṭada, but her lover was Pandēra.' Another said: 'Her husband surely was Pappus ben Judah; on the contrary Ṣṭada was his mother': or, according to others, his mother was Miriam, the women's hairdresser. The rejoinder is: 'Quite so, but Ṣṭada is her nickname, as it is said at Pumbēditha: sēṭath da (she proved faithless) to her husband.'"²

From this passage, it appears that by the end of the third or beginning of the fourth century A.D. the question was already debated in the Babylonian schools which of the two familiar designations was the correct one, son of Ṣṭada or son of Pandēra? The tradition was hopelessly confused ; it only agreed in the assertion of Jesus' illegitimacy.

¹ Miriam Mēgaddelā = "Miriam (Mary), the women's hairdresser," is simply a parody on Mary of Magdala (Magdalene who was taken to be the mother of Jesus).

² Cf. Laible-Dalman, p. 9.

APPENDIX I

There are also special references in the Talmudic literature, equally confused and legendary, regarding Mary. In one of these passages (Kalla 18 b.) the mother of Jesus is made to confess the secret of his illegitimate birth to Aḳiba. In another, from the Jerusalem Talmud (Ḥagiga 77 d.) a devout person relates that he saw in a dream various punishments in Hell.

He saw also Miriam, the daughter of Eli Beṣālīm, suspended, as R. Lazar ben Jose says, by her breasts. R. Jose ben Hanina says : "The hinge of hell's gate was fastened to her ear." He said to them [the angels of punishment] : "Why is this done to her ?" The answer was : "Because she fasted and published the fact." Others said : "Because she fasted one day, and counted two days [of feasting] as a set off."

The passage itself shews, however, that this Mary, the daughter of Eli, cannot be the mother of Jesus ; otherwise her special offence could hardly have been stated to be an irreligious practice of fasting. Regarding Jesus' boyhood, the following passage from T B Sanhedrin 107 b. may be quoted¹—

The Rabbis have taught : The left should always be repelled, and the right, on the other hand, drawn nearer. But one should not do it . . . as R. Joshua b. Perahyā, who thrust forth Jesus with both hands. What was the matter with regard to R. Joshua b. Perahyā ? When King Jannai [i.e., Alexander Jannaeus, King of the Jews, 104–78 B.C.] directed the destruction of the Rabbis, R. Joshua b. Pērahyā and Jesus went to Alexandria. When security returned, R. Simon ben Shetaḥ (flourished c. 78–80 B.C. as president of the Sanhedrin) sent him a letter to this effect : "From me, Jerusalem the holy city, to thee, Alexandria in Egypt, my sister. My ¹ Cf. also the parallel passages in the Jerusalem Talmud, Ḥagiga ii. 2 ; Sanhedrin vi. 8. See Laible-Dalman, pp. 41 ff.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

spouse tarries in thee, and I dwell desolate." There-upon Joshua arose and came; and a certain inn was in his way, in which they treated him with great respect. Then spake Joshua: "How fair is this inn ('akhsanya)." Jesus said to him: "But, Rabbi, she ('akhsanya = a hostess) has little narrow eyes." Joshua replied: "Thou godless fellow, dost thou occupy thyself with such things?" He (the Rabbi) directed that 400 horns should be brought, and put him under strict excommunication. Jesus often came and said to him: "Take me back." Joshua did not trouble himself about him. One day, as Joshua was reading the Shema¹ Jesus came to him hoping that he would take him back. Joshua made a sign to him with his hand. Then Jesus thought he had altogether repulsed him, and went away, set up a brickbat, and worshipped it. Joshua said to him: "Be converted." Jesus saith: "Thus have I been taught by thee: from him that sinneth and that maketh the people to sin is taken away the possibility of repentance." And the Teacher² has said: "Jesus had practised sorcery and had corrupted and misled Israel."

It is doubtful whether this passage originally referred to Jesus at all. The anachronism is glaring, as the events alluded to must have taken place a century before the time of the historical Jesus. About the year 87 B.C. a wholesale execution of Pharisees was carried out by Alexander Jannæus, while many members of the party fled to Syria and Egypt, and among them Joshua ben Perahyā. The narrative cited above probably contains, in its original form, a genuine reminiscence of an incident of the time. Later, as a perversion of the Gospel account of Our Lord's Flight into Egypt (Matt. ii. 13-15), the name of Jesus was introduced, and the whole story applied to him.

¹ Shema —i.e., the passage from Deut. vi. 4, beginning with the words Hear, O Israel. It is a pious Jew's duty to recite the Shema daily at certain hours. It consists of Deut. vi. 4-9, xi. 13-21, and Numb. xv. 37-41.

² i.e., "he who is everywhere mentioned by this title in the Talmud." (Streane.)

APPENDIX I

The story of Jesus' sojourn in Egypt plays an important part in these legends. According to the Gospels, it is the early years of Jesus' life, immediately following infancy, that were spent in Egypt. But, in the Jewish legendary tradition he is represented as being there in early manhood. This representation goes back as far as Celsus, who asserts that Jesus was in service in Egypt and learned magic there. His power to work miracles is ascribed to the knowledge of magic acquired in Egypt. Thus, in Shabbath 104 b (just before the passage quoted above) it is said—

There is a tradition. R. Eliezer said to the wise :
“ Did not the son of Stada bring magic spells from Egypt in an incision in his skin ? ”

The charge levelled against Jesus of being a magician is frequently made in this literature. Jerome mentions it, alleging of the Jews Magum vocant et Judaei Dominum meum.¹ Jesus is also charged, in these Jewish sources, with having deceived the people and led them astray (cf. John vii. 12 : Some said, He is a good man ; others said, not so but he leadeth the multitudes astray). “ As Baalam the magician and, according to the derivation of his name, ‘destroyer of the people,’ was from both these points of view a good prototype of Jesus, the latter was also called ‘Balam.’ ”²

A survey of the materials, scattered about the Talmudic literature, that deals with Jesus, only deepens the impression of unreality produced by the references in detail. It is clear that this material depends on no genuine historical tradition. In many cases the statements are clearly perversions of Christian ones, and are of a polemical character, which can only have grown up after Christianity had become a definitely organized force. There is no direct contact with the older Jewish tradition that lies behind the Gospels. It is, indeed, possible that behind the Talmudic references to Jesus' sojourn in Egypt there may be an independent tradition which has been distorted later. But if this be so, it will form a solitary exception.

¹ Ep. LV. ad Ascellam.

² Krauss in J E, vii. 171.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

In the mediaeval Toledoth Jeshu, or Jewish lives of Jesus, the various legendary stories and motifs sketched above have been worked up into detailed and continuous narratives, and, in some cases, the legends have been expanded and developed. These Toledoth exist in several recensions,¹ and read somewhat like the narratives of the Apocryphal Gospels.

One type of text narrates that a pious man of the House of David, Johanan, at Bethlehem, was betrothed to a certain Miriam. Joseph Pandira, a man of bad character, of the tribe of Judah, takes advantage of Miriam by night, deceiving her, and making her suppose that he is her betrothed. After the lapse of three months Johanan discovers her condition, suspects Pandira, but being unable to prove his suspicions to his master, Simon ben Shetaḥ, flees from shame to Babylon. Jesus is born in due course, and handed over by his mother to R. Elhanan as his teacher. Jesus by his bold and shameless conduct towards the Rabbis excites their suspicions that he is a mamzēr ben niddā, a suspicion which is confirmed by Simon ben Shetaḥ. Thereupon Jesus is excommunicated, and flees to upper Galilee. When his shameful origin becomes known there, he comes to Jerusalem, and by stratagem, and at great danger to himself, enters the Holy of Holies, learns the secret of the ineffable name, and successfully emerges with this knowledge.² He then publicly asserts at Bethlehem his virgin birth (as against the shameful story of his illegitimate origin), declares that he is the Son of God, and works miracles. And so on.

¹ Texts and translations of several are given in Krauss, op. cit., pp. 38-149.

² Such knowledge, if retained, was supposed to enable its possessor to work miracles.

APPENDIX I

These "histories" of Jesus were widely circulated among the Jews of the Middle Ages, and are still read in certain circles. They possess little, if any, historic value, as regards their statements of fact, but are of tragic significance as reflecting the passion and bitterness excited by the conflicts between Jews and Christians.

APPENDIX II

ANCIENT JEWISH BETROTHAL AND MARRIAGE

It is necessary, in order to form a correct idea of ancient Jewish betrothal and marriage, to dismiss from one's mind the later outgrowth of custom by which the ceremonies became invested with solemn liturgical associations and sanctions. Ancient betrothal and marriage, among the Jews as among other Orientals, were distinct things, separated by a substantial interval of time; and they were essentially social acts, which centred in the homes of the bride's parents and of the bridegroom. There is no question of a religious ceremony taking place in a place of worship, such as a synagogue. The ceremony of betrothal consecrated the bride to her husband in the most binding way; and the marriage proper consisted essentially in the bridegroom's leading to his own home his espoused wife. The feasting and other social acts were simply accompaniments of these fundamental facts, and were in no wise essential.

The Rabbinical literature also testifies to the existence, in early times, of certain differences in regard to betrothal and marriage between Galilee and Judaea. Edersheim (L J M, i. 148) sums this up as follows—

The purity of betrothal in Galilee was less likely to be sullied, and weddings were more simple than in Judaea—without the dubious institution of groomsmen, or "friend of the bridegroom," whose office must not unfrequently have degenerated into utter coarseness. The bride was chosen, not as in Judaea, where money was too often the motive, but as in Jerusalem, with chief regard to a "fair degree"; and widows were (as in Jerusalem) more tenderly cared for, as we gather even from the fact, that they had a life-right of residence in their husband's house.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

A special term used in connexion with betrothal is "consecrate." The betrothed woman is "consecrated" to her espoused husband (i.e., she becomes his by inviolable right). The betrothal could be effected in one of three ways; either (a) by a declaration, made in the presence of witnesses and accompanied by a pledge—the giving by the man of a piece of money, or something valuable; or (b) by a written document; or (c) by cohabitation. All three ways in ancient times had to be attested; and, naturally, the third, though lawful was the least reputable. In the case of well-to-do people, a feast was held to celebrate the event; but in the case of poorer people, such as Joseph and Mary were, this would be dispensed with.

The betrothal would normally take place at the home of the bride's parents, and was legalized by a declaration made by the man to the woman in the form, probably, which has become traditional—of course, in the presence of witnesses:

Behold thou art consecrated to me by [one of the three ways mentioned above¹] according to the custom of Moses and of Israel.

Probably the betrothed pair also then received a blessing, pronounced, perhaps, by the father of the woman, over a cup of wine (which may have been tasted by the pair). This probably corresponded, more or less, to the traditional form which is now used ²—

Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe, who hast sanctified us by Thy commandments, and hast enjoined us about forbidden marriages; who hast forbidden us the betrothed, but hast allowed us such as are wedded to us by the rite of the canopy and betrothal.

*Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who sanctifiest Thy people Israel by the rite of canopy (huppā) and betrothal.*

¹ The modern custom of using a ring at this point ("by this ring") only dates from mediaeval times.

² Cf. Singer, p. 298.

APPENDIX II

The betrothal, once completed in due form, was as binding as marriage. The tie could not be dissolved except in the same way as the marriage-bond itself; and any connexion entered into by the woman with another man (unless a formal dissolution of the bond had been effected) would be treated as adultery. Betrothal carried with it all the rights and obligations of marriage, with the exception of cohabitation.

The actual marriage took place after an interval of varying length. If the betrothed woman were a virgin, a year might elapse; in the case of a widow the interval was much shorter. The reason seems to have been that a sufficient time must be allowed for the bride to make ready her wedding-equipment, and for the bridegroom to prepare for the wedding ceremonies. These centred in the house of the bridegroom, although a festival preliminary, called protogamyia (= πρωτογαμεία, confused (?) with προγάμια) was held a week (or the Sabbath) before the actual wedding, in the house of the bride's parents. When the families were well-to-do, the ceremonies were elaborated with a certain amount of pomp, which, however, was discarded in times of danger. The following description gives with sufficient accuracy the normal course of such an ancient Jewish wedding—

“The ceremony was always in the evening at sunset. The most solemn moment, that which marked the completion of the marriage, was when the bride entered the house of her fiancé, her new home. Hence marriage was called ‘reception,’ or ‘introduction of the wife’ into the house of her husband.¹ The relatives of the young girl² came to her father's house to take her to the house of her husband. Sometimes the bridegroom himself came, as in the parable of the ten virgins (cf. Matt. xxv. 11 ff.; cf. Is. lxi. 10; Canticles iii. 11). Her relations gave her their blessing (cf. Gen. xxiv. 60). She went out from her father's house perfumed and adorned, and with a crown on her head.¹ She was surrounded by her young friends, who made a train for her and waved myrtle branches above her head. Each of these young girls carried a lamp which she had brought with her. This lamp was composed of a stick of wood with a little vase or plate at the end, in which was a wick with oil and wax. The Gospel speaks of 'ten virgins,' sometimes there were many more than this, rarely less.

¹ “Reception” = Heb. nissu'in: cf. the Roman deductio in domum mariti.

² According to Pirke 'Aboth the bridegroom must be at least 18 years old; the bride 12.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

"The bride, as she went from one house to the other, had her hair loose and floating and her face veiled. The relations going in front of her scattered ears of parched corn to the children. There were demonstrations of joy all the way she went. If the husband came to fetch her, he adorned himself also, and wore a crown. . . . In the procession were men playing drums or other musical instruments. Many carried torches, others danced and sang."²

Arrived at the house of the bridegroom (or of the bridegroom's father), the bride, after certain preliminaries concerned with the arrangement of her hair and veil, was led to the huppā, which was originally a tent, probably; and here she was placed by her husband's side, and with him received, perhaps, a benediction pronounced by one of the fathers, or some other important person (e.g., a distinguished Rabbi) who was present. Within this apartment the wedded pair were left alone for a time, that they might become used to each other's society. Later came the wedding feast, ¹ Both bride and bridegroom wore crowns on the occasion, being treated as king and queen; cf. Ezek. xvi. 11-13; Is. lxi. 10; Cant. iii. 11 (Jer. ii. 32). This custom was discarded after the Roman wars.

² Stapfer, Palestine in the Time of Christ (E.T., 1886), p. 163 f.

APPENDIX II

which was held in another part of the house, specially prepared for the purpose. The banquet was a scene of much joyousness—"a banquet of music and wine"—and was illuminated with many lights.¹ The guests were called "sons of the bridechamber" (υἱοὶ τοῦ νυμφῶνος, Matt. ix. 15 and parallels). At the end of the feast, the husband was conducted by his friends ("the sons of the bridechamber") once more into the huppā (or equivalent apartment) whither his wife had preceded him, and where the marriage was consummated.

The wedding-festival normally lasted seven days (cf. Matt. ix. 15; Gen. xxix. 27; Judg. xiv. 12); but this period was shortened in certain cases.

"The reader will have observed," says Stapfer,² "that there was no religious ceremony (strictly speaking) at the marriage. The benediction of the relations and friends was all that the newly-wedded pair received." This statement is generally true of ancient marriage in Israel (cf. Ruth iv. 11; Tobit vii. 18). But in the later period the Rabbis laboured diligently to invest the rites with religious sanctions,³ and ultimately these efforts were largely successful. We may safely assume that the beginnings of this process were already at work, to some slight extent, when the betrothal of Joseph and Mary took place. In the case of quite poor people, the ceremonies would naturally be of the simplest character. Sometimes the bride would leave her native place to join her husband elsewhere. Marriages which involved the wife's migration from Judaea

¹ For lights at the wedding-feast, cf. 2 Esdras x. 2. It is related (T B Berakoth 31 a.) that when Mar the son of Rabbena celebrated the wedding of his daughter, he invited the Rabbis to be present; but as their mirth exceeded bounds, he bought a costly vase, worth 400 zuz, and broke it before them, in order to moderate their unrestrained demonstrations.

² Op. cit., p. 165.

³ It must be remembered that no marriage-rite is prescribed in the Mosaic Law.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

to Galilee, or vice-versâ, though not usual, are referred to in the Mishna.¹

If Joseph's home was in Bethlehem, by taking Mary, his betrothed, with him when he left Nazareth for his home-town, he was performing the central and public act which proclaimed the marriage. Henceforth Mary was his wife, and the offspring born of her would be considered to be Joseph's child.

[See, further, Krauss: Talmudische Archäologie II, pp. 34-43, with the important notes, and Edersheim op. cit. (reff. s. v. Marriage and Betrothal in Index); also Löw, Lebensalter, pp. 185-194.]

¹ Cf. Kethuboth xiii. 10, and Bartenora ad loc. ("Si aliquis e Galilaea duxerit uxorem in Judaea, aut vice versâ, cogunt eam ut exeat cum eo, quia ea intentione eam duxit").

APPENDED NOTES

NOTE 1 (p. 15).—The Text of Matthew i. 16 f.

TEXTUAL EVIDENCE

THE reading of the vast majority of MSS. and Versions is—

Ἰακώβ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἰωσήφ, τὸν ἄνδρα Μαρίας, ἐξ ἧς ἐγεννήθη Ἰησοῦς ὁ λεγόμενος Χριστός.

In this majority are included not only the great uncials α and B, of the fourth century, but also the papyrus fragment cited as p^1 , which is dated third to fourth century, and is supposed to be the oldest MS. of the New Testament in existence.

A small but important group of MSS. and versions, however, has—

Ἰακώβ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἰωσήφ, ᾧ μνηστευθεῖσα παρθένος Μαριάμ ἐγέννησεν Ἰησοῦν τὸν λεγόμενον Χριστόν.

This is the reading of the “Ferrar group” of minuscules, a small group of comparatively late MSS., but containing many early and important readings; the Curetonian Syriac practically reproduces this text, as do some of the Old Latin MSS., and also the Armenian version.

The Old Latin MSS. read as follows—

- (i) iacob autem genuit ioseph cui desponsata uirgo maria genuit iesum qui dicitur (uocatur g.) christus a g.

iacob autem genuit ioseph cui desponsata uirgo maria peperit christum iesum d (D^{gr} is defective here).

et iacob genuit iosef cui desponsata uirgo maria genuit iesum k.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

- (ii) iacob autem genuit ioseph cui desponsata maria genuit iesum qui uocatur christus q.
- (iii) iacob autem genuit ioseph cui desponsata uirgo maria maria autem genuit iesum qui dicitur christus c.
iacob autem genuit ioseph cui desponsata erat uirgo maria uirgo autem maria genuit iesum [qui dicitur christus] b.

It should be noticed that both the Greek and the Latin (as given in a d g k) of this sentence are ambiguous ; the ϕ (cui) might be dependent on the $\mu\eta\sigma\tau\epsilon\upsilon\theta\epsilon\iota\sigma\alpha$ (desponsata) or on the $\epsilon\gamma\acute{\epsilon}\nu\eta\eta\sigma\epsilon\nu$ (genuit or peperit) ; if the former, the passage would only assert that Mary was betrothed to Joseph at the time when she gave birth to Jesus ; if the latter, it would assert that she bore Him to Joseph (i.e., that Joseph was the father). The scribe of q apparently took it in the latter sense, and so he dropped out the word uirgo ; the scribes of c and b took it in the former, and amplified their sentences in order to make the meaning quite clear ; the groups marked ii and iii, therefore, seem to depend on the group marked i.

The Curetonian Syriac reads—

*Jacob begat Joseph, him to whom was betrothed
Mary the virgin, she who bare Jesus the Messiah.*

This closely resembles the Old Latin MSS. c and b and, like them, seems to be an interpretation rather than a translation of the Greek text given us by the Ferrar group.

The Sinai Syriac, however, varies from the above forms ; it reads—

Jacob begat Joseph. Joseph, to whom was betrothed Mary the virgin, begat Jesus, called the Messiah.

Here, the paternity of Joseph is directly asserted ; the scribe has taken ϕ as dependent on $\epsilon\gamma\acute{\epsilon}\nu\eta\eta\sigma\epsilon\nu$, and he has rendered his meaning clear by repeating the word Joseph, just as the Curetonian Syriac and the Old Latins c and b have produced the opposite effect by repeating the word Mary, or adding she.

APPENDED NOTES

It is, therefore, very probable, from a textual critical point of view, that the ambiguous reading of the Ferrar group is the earliest, and that the readings of c, b, ur. syr., and of Sin. syr. are simply later attempts to solve the ambiguity in different directions.

We are next brought to the question, which of the two Greek readings is original, the ordinary reading, or that of the Ferrar group? The ordinary reading is certainly the simpler; it states directly, almost crudely, that "Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary, from whom was born Jesus who is called the Christ"; this does not look like an emendation of another text. On the other hand, the Ferrar-group reading is not so simple, and may be explained as the result of reflection on the ordinary text. The scribe seems to have shrunk from describing Joseph as the husband of Mary; was he not the Virgin Mary? Could she be properly said to be married, or to have a husband? He, therefore, inserted the παρθένος to emphasize her virginity, and a remembrance of v. 18, or of Luke ii. 5, provided him with a substitute for τὸν ἄνδρα; he would say that she was only betrothed to him; thus the simple τὸν ἄνδρα Μαρίας became expanded into ᾧ μνηστευθεῖσα παρθένος Μαρίαμ. If this explanation be correct, it is the strangest irony of fate that an alteration made in order to assert without possibility of doubt the Virgin Birth should have produced the very reading which seemed to deny it.

We are not, however, at the end of our textual variations. Later in the chapter (v. 21) instead of the simple τέξεται δὲ υἱόν, "she shall bring forth a son," the Sinai and Curetonian Syriac read "she shall bear to thee a son"; and at the end of the chapter, the Sinai Syriac, with the Old Latin k, omits the words οὐκ ἐγίνωσκεν ὅτι ἦν ἕως οὗ; whilst in the last sentence it again has the pronoun "she bore to him a son" (here without the company of k).

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

The MS. evidence for these later variants is numerically much weaker, and grows weaker with the recurring variations, until at the end sin. syr. is left alone. It is of course, possible that this represents the gradual triumph of the "orthodox" text in extruding its rivals; but it is equally possible that the persistence of sin. syr. in adding to thee, and to him, may be the isolated effort of a single scribe, or school of scribes, determined to give a particular interpretation to the Birth-Narrative.

NOTE 2 (p. 16).—Was there an early Jewish belief in the Virgin Birth of the Messiah?

We have maintained that no trace of an expectation that the Messiah would be born of a virgin has survived in Jewish literature, and have shewn (cf. p. 16 f., cf. p. 169) that the Messianic application of Is. vii. 14 in this sense was first made by Jewish-Christians. This position is traversed by Mr. Badham, who, in the Academy for 8th June, 1895, cites a number of Rabbinical passages which are supposed to attest the expectation. The sources of these are mainly Raymund Martin's Pugio Fidei (c. A.D. 1280) and Vincenti's Messia Venuto (A.D. 1659). The most important passages quoted in Martin (ed. Carpzov, p. 154 f.). depend upon the authority of Moses ha-Darshan, and have no independent verification. He is cited as follows (in a comment on Gen. xxxvii. 22)—

"The Redeemer whom I will raise up from you will have no father, as it is said (Zech. vi. 12) Behold the man whose name is the Sprout (Branch), and he shall sprout from his place: and in like manner i (Scripture) says (Is. liii. 2) He grew up as a sapling before Him and as a sprout out of a dry ground. David also says in reference to him (Ps. cx. 3), From the womb (as) from the morning Thou hast the dew of thy nativity¹; and (further) about him it (the Scripture) says (Ps. ii. 7), This day have I begotten thee."

APPENDED NOTES

It is not necessary to suppose that Martin's quotations from Moses ha-Darshan are forgeries. They probably are not. This Moses was a French exegete of the eleventh century, and his comments are often cited by Rashi. He was considered to be a Rabbinical authority, and was famous as an authority in Midrashic interpretation of Scripture. He apparently wrote a large Midrashic Commentary on the Bible, which is only known to us in quotations. He cites from earlier haggadic works, as well as gives Midrashic explanations of his own. "Often the latter were not in harmony with the spirit of the Rabbinical Midrash, and even contained Christian theological conceptions."² The non-preservation of his original work may be due to this fact. Probably the citations from Moses given by Raymund Martin are of this character. The Midrash Bereshith Rabba cited by the same authority seems to have been interpolated from Moses ha-Darshan.

In Justin Martyr (Dial. c. Trypho lxiii.) there is a curiously interesting collection of proof-passages from Scripture in support of the Virgin Birth. These include, besides Is. vii. 14, also liii. 8 (Who shall declare his generation? "seems to intimate that he, whom God delivered unto death for the iniquities of the people, had not his original from man"). Gen. xlix. 11 (wash his garment in the blood of the grape "because his blood was not of human extraction, but by the will of God"). Ps. cx. 3 and ii. 7. The last two agree with the passage

¹ A further comment attributed to Rashi by Martin elucidates this: "Quasi ros a Domino . . . qui nunquam per hominem demittitur. Nonne sic designatur a Davide nativitas Messiae futura a Domino, sine ulla virili actione, virtute divinâ?"

² Cf. J E s. v. Moses ha-Darshan ix. 64.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

from Moses ha-Darshan cited above. Ps. cx. 3 is cited by Justin, as in the LXX., as follows—

In the beauties of thy saints, from the womb have I begotten thee before the morning star.

While this translation does not imply any idea originally of the Virgin Birth of the Messiah, it does express the belief in his pre-existence, of which there are other traces in the LXX. The Messiah is conceived of as a pre-existent angelic being in this and some other passages in the LXX.¹ The application of the passage by Justin to Our Lord's Virgin Birth is a purely Christian one, facilitated by the fact that Ps. cx. was undoubtedly interpreted in a Messianic sense in the ancient synagogue.

That Isaiah vii. 14 had not been traditionally interpreted in a Messianic sense among the Jews before Justin's time follows from what Justin himself (Dial. c. Trypho lxxi.) says—

For you do not allow of all that I have hitherto alleged, except this part of the prophecy, Behold a virgin (παρθένος) shall conceive, which you oppose and say it is Behold a young woman (νεάνις) shall conceive. And because I did, indeed promise to prove that this prophecy was not spoken of Hezekiah, as you have been taught, but of this Christ of mine, I will now, in order to fulfil my promise, proceed to prove it.

On this passage Dr. Stanton² pertinently remarks: "If Jewish interpreters had changed its application, or if any school among them had held the Messianic view, he [Justin] would certainly, judging by charges he brings in many cases, have made the most of the fact."

It is a fair inference from Justin's words that no such interpretation was known to have existed in any purely Jewish circles.

[It is interesting to notice, however, that Irenaeus

¹ Cf. Bousset *Die Religion des Judentums*², p. 303 f.

² The Jewish and Christian Messiah, p. 77.

APPENDED NOTES

i. 1 (Greek text) refers to the substitution of ἡ νεάνις in the later Greek versions of Is. vii. 14 for the LXX. παρθένος as embodying a comparatively recent and innovating exegesis. The passage runs—

“God then became man, and the Lord Himself saved us, having given the sign of the Virgin; not, however, as some of those say who now (νῦν) presume to interpret the Scripture (Is. vii. 14), Behold the young woman (ἡ νεάνις) shall conceive and bear a son—as Theodotion the Ephesian has interpreted, and Aquila of Pontus, both Jewish proselytes, following whom the Ebionites assert that He (Christ) was begotten by Joseph.”]

NOTE 3 (p. 21).

The text of the Midrash Rabba on Exod. i. 22 runs as follows—

And Pharaoh charged all his people [saying, every son that is born ye shall cast into the river]. R. Jose bar Hanina said: He laid the command upon his own people. And why did he do this? Because the astrologers told him that the mother of Israel's (future) redeemer had already conceived him; “we do not know, however, whether he is to be an Israelite or Egyptian.” Thereupon Pharaoh assembled all the Egyptians, and said: “Lend me your sons nine months (i.e., those born within nine months from the time referred to), that I may cast them into the river”—as it is written, every son that is born, into the river [ye shall cast]; it is not there written every son of Israel, but every man, whether Jew or Egyptian. But they (i.e., the Egyptians) would not consent to this, because they said, A son of an Egyptian will never redeem them, but (only) he (who is a son) of the Hebrews.”

Ye shall cast into the river. Why did they decide to cast them into the river? Because the astrologers saw that Israel's saviour was destined to suffer (punishment) through water; and they supposed (therefore) he would be drowned. But (in fact) it was only on account of a well of water that the decree of death was pronounced upon him (i.e., upon Moses), as it is said (Numb. xx.): [And Moses and Aaron gathered the assembly together before the rock, and he said unto them, Hear now ye rebels; shall we bring you forth water out of the rock?] And the Lord said unto Moses and Aaron, Because ye believed not in me, to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this assembly into the land which I have given them.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

The Rabbi cited as authority in the above passage, Jose bar Hanina, flourished within the century A.D. 180–280, but it is clear from the Josephus-passage cited below that the main essentials of the story go back to the first century A.D., at least, and are probably earlier still in origin. The Rabbi may merely have developed the exegetical features.

Josephus (Antiq. ii. 9, § 2) says¹—

While the affairs of the Hebrews were in this condition, there was this occasion offered itself to the Egyptians, which made them more solicitous for the extinction of our nation.—One of those sacred scribes (τῶν ἱερογραμματέων τις) who are very sagacious in foretelling future events truly, told the King that about this time there would be a child born to the Israelites, who, if he were reared, would bring the Egyptian dominion low, and would raise the Israelites; that he would excel all men in virtue, and obtain a glory that would be remembered through all ages. Which thing was so feared by the King, that according to this man's opinion, he commanded that they should cast every male child, which was born to the Israelites, into the river, and destroy it.

NOTE 4 (p. 88 cf. p. 34).—The historicity of the account of the Baptist's Birth given in Luke i.

On various grounds, the historicity of St. Luke's account of the Baptist's birth has been challenged. It is no part of our task here to discuss these in detail.

¹ = § 205 f. in Niese. The translation is that of Margoliouth's revision of Whiston.

APPENDED NOTES

One point, however, which has been made by Leopold Löw (Lebensalter, p. 96) against the Lukan narrative may be noticed. He asserts that St. Luke betrays his unfamiliarity with Jewish family custom in supposing that it would be possible for the first-born son of Zacharias and Elizabeth to bear the name of his father (Luke i. 59). Such a custom, he says, was only followed in the case of posthumous children. As Franz Delitzsch has pointed out, however (*Horae Hebraicae et Talmudicae*¹ on Luke i. 59), there are exceptions to this rule. It was, no doubt, usual in ancient times for a child to be named after a living grandfather. But there are cases in which the child received the name of the father, even when the father was still living. Thus, the High Priest Onias IV was the son of Onias III; and in the Talmuds such names are found as Bunyas the son of Bunyas (Ernbin 85 b.), and Zaza the son of Zaza (Rosh ha-shanā 25 a.), and there are other cases.

It may be suggested, however, that the proposal on the part of the family of Zacharias to name the child after his father may have been prompted by the feeling that the birth was so extraordinary and unlooked for that the child might be regarded almost as posthumous. Just as the birth of a posthumous child was felt to save the remembrance (which ought to be perpetuated in its name) of the dead father, so the birth of a son to Zacharias in the old age of himself and Elizabeth, may have been felt to deserve a similar recognition.

NOTE 5 (p. 35).—The text of Luke i. 34–38

The textual problem here is much simpler than in the case of Matt. i. 16, and hinges on the reading of a single Old Latin MS., the Codex Veronensis (b), which reads as follows—

Dixit autem maria ecce ancilla domini contingat

¹ Cf. also his essay published in the Literarisch Centralblatt, 1875, No. 27.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

mihi secundum uerbum tuum. Et respondens angelus dixit illi spiritus sanctus superueniet te et uirtus altissimi obumbravit te ideoque quod nascetur sanctus uocabitur filius dei. Et ecce elisabel cognata tua et ipsa concepit filium in senecta sua et hic mensis est sextus illi quae uocabatur sterilis quia non est impossibile deo omne uerbum et discessit ab illa angelus.

Comparing this with the ordinary text, we note: (1) that b omits the question of Mary, "How shall this be, seeing that I know not a man?" ; and (2) that it transposes the second utterance of Mary to the space vacated by the omission of the first.

Certainly b is an extremely early and valuable witness, and none of its readings can be lightly disregarded. Nevertheless, there are two weighty reasons for regarding it with suspicion in this case: (1) The whole passage reads awkwardly in the b text; why should the angel give this full explanation of how the birth is to be possible, if Mary had asked no question and expressed no doubt? The sentence, "Spiritus sanctus superueniet" etc., is almost unintelligible save as the answer to a question. (2) The b text has a similar transposition and omission in the account of the Last Supper in Luke xxii. 16 f.; it there places v. 19 between 16 and 17, and omits v. 20, thus bringing the consecration of the bread before the cup, and getting rid of the second cup. It looks, therefore, as if the scribe of b were, either from mistake or design, prone to such transpositions. If the transposition in ch. xxii. was made designedly, it is all the more probable that the change in ch. i. was made designedly, and, consequently, that it is the ordinary text, not the b text, which is original there. If the transposition in ch. xxii. was the result of an error—and no one maintains that the b text is original there—the reading in ch. i. must be judged on its own merits, unless we can discover some cause which may reasonably explain both changes; and it is possible that a purely palaeographical blunder, due to the length of the lines, and the number of lines to a column, in the exemplar, may lie at the root of both these transpositions; see A. C. Clark, Primitive Text of the Gospels, p. 78, and H. J. White, Journal of Theological Studies, Vol. XV (July, 1914), p. 600 f.

APPENDED NOTES

St. Luke ii. 5

The Greek MSS. vary here: τῇ ἐμνηστευμένη αὐτῷ is read by * B C * vid D L X 1. 131. 2^{pe}; τῇ ἐμνηστευμένη αὐτῷ γυναικί by A C² vid ΓΔΔ unc. 9 al. pler.

Judging by the rules we should apply in ordinary cases, we should unhesitatingly conclude that τῇ ἐμνηστευμένη αὐτῷ was the right reading; the earliest and most valuable MSS. read it; it is the shorter reading; and had γυναικί been original we should have expected αὐτοῦ rather than αὐτῷ. But the witness of the Old Latin MSS. makes this conclusion a little doubtful; they read: desponsata sibi (ei d) d f q^c, sponsa sua e r, which are apparently renderings of τῇ ἐμνηστευμένη αὐτῷ; uxore sua a b c, which suggests a Greek τῇ γυναικί αὐτοῦ; desponsata sibi uxore ff₂ δ, and the Vulgate, *uxore sua desponsata l, uxore sua desponsata ei q, which are either conflations or translations of τῇ ἐμνηστευμένη αὐτῷ γυναικί.

The Sinai Syriac agrees with the Old Latin a b c and has "his wife." These variations certainly suggest an early reading of τῇ γυναικί αὐτοῦ here as a rival to τῇ ἐμνηστευμένη αὐτῷ. At the same time, the possibility must be remembered that the rare τῇ ἐμνηστευμένη αὐτῷ might be changed into the more familiar expression τῇ γυναικί αὐτοῦ; or, again, that a scribe having "desponsata sibi uxore" before him might omit by a slip the "desponsata" and then correct "sibi uxore" into "uxore sua"; these are only possibilities, but it is never wise to neglect possibilities.

[As has been shewn in Appendix II, Joseph's leading the Virgin from her home in Nazareth to his own home in Bethlehem was equivalent to marriage in the Oriental sense. Therefore, it would be in accordance with the facts to speak of Mary in ii. 5 as Joseph's wife, while in the earlier chapter (before the journey to Bethlehem) she is his "betrothed."]

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

NOTE 6 (p. 41).—The Magnificat is to be attributed to Mary and not to Elizabeth

On the question whether the Magnificat is intended by the compiler to be an utterance of Mary or Elizabeth, there is some difference of opinion among scholars. The questions involved are partly textual, and partly critical. There is some authority for the reading Elizabeth in Luke i. 46. The matter is admirably discussed by Mr. C. W. Emmet,¹ and to his essay the reader can be referred. Referring to the reading Elizabeth, Mr. Emmet remarks—

"It seems to be too widely spread to be ascribed to a slip of the pen, and it is obviously improbable that Elizabeth should ever have been substituted for Mary, whilst the reverse is possible enough. On the other hand, the evidence for Mary is far too strong (including, e.g., Tertullian), and that for Elizabeth too weak to allow us to suppose the latter to have been the original reading. The conclusion of the majority ¹ In The Eschatological Question in the Gospels and other Studies in New Testament Criticism (1911), pp. 175–187.

It should be noted that the authorities for "Elizabeth" in Luke i. 46 are entirely Latin, and consist of the Old Latin MSS. a (elisabet) b (elisabel) c (elisabeth), two MSS. (codd. Yoss. et Clarom.) in a quotation by Irenaeus (iv. 7, 1), and some MSS. in the Latin version (made by Jerome) of Origen's Commentary on St. Luke (iii., p. 940 in Delarue's edition of Origen); Nicetas of Remesiana (iii.–iv. cent.) does not seem to know of any other reading; see pp. 76 and 79 of Burn's edition, and the short articles by Bp. J. Wordsworth on pp. clv.–clviii., and by Prof. Burkitt on pp. cliii.–cliv. of the Introduction of Burn's work; Burn also refers to Spitta's Theol. Abhandlungen, 1902, p. 224 ff.

APPENDED NOTES

of recent critics is that the real reading is καὶ εἶπεν ('and she said'), from which the variants were derived by way of gloss."

But, if so, which gloss is right? Burn and Wordsworth say Mary; Burkitt, Harnack, Loisy, Schmiedel say Elizabeth. The general situation, and the character of the song, certainly favour its ascription to Mary rather than Elizabeth. "There can, indeed, be no doubt that Mary is intended to be the real centre of the picture; if she is deprived of the Magnificat, she is left on this occasion absolutely silent." Mr. Emmet sums up as follows—

"Our conclusion, then, is that we need have little hesitation in believing the ordinary view to be correct. It is by no means certain that the accepted reading is wrong; and even if we assume an original καὶ εἶπεν, it will still remain probable that St. Luke intended Mary to be understood as the speaker of the Magnificat."

NOTE 7 (p 117).—Prof. Lake's Emendation of Gal. ii. 1 ("four" for "fourteen")

Prof. H. J. White writes as follows: "I distrust hypotheses which require the alteration of the Greek text, and especially alterations of numbers, supposed to be expressed by Greek letters (such as ιδ' ετων for δ' ετων in Gal. ii. 1). It is with diffidence that I venture to criticize such a high authority on Greek MSS. as Prof. Lake; but my experience is that in Uncial MSS. numbers are usually written at length; e.g., δεκατεσσαρων and τεσσαρων [in Uncial letters], though certainly there are plenty of exceptions. In papyri, of course, the date of the document is expressed compendiously; but in the text numbers seem generally to be written at length."

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

NOTE 8 (p. 142).—" He is beside himself "
(Mark iii. 21)

What has been said in our discussion as to the Virgin's consciousness of her Son's mysterious origin and destiny may be reinforced by some remarks of a contributor to The Church Quarterly Review (July, 1904, p. 391), who says, with reference to the type of objection that is commonly put forward in this connexion—

"It assumes that from the moment of Christ's birth, Mary must always have lived in the full consciousness of the fact that her Son was an Incarnation of God. This is a quite gratuitous and very unphilosophical and unhistorical hypothesis. It is psychologically more probable, as it is historically more certain, that the Virgin developed very gradually a right understanding and appreciation of the character and nature of her Divine Son. . . . As the years passed by, doubt and questioning, wonder and surmise, must have mingled themselves in her mind. On the one hand there was her Son, a being of flesh and blood, entering into all the daily concerns of their homely life. On the other, there was the recollection of the wonder of His birth, and the gracious divinity of His nature. That His parents often misunderstood is, in every respect, probable, and Professor Lobstein's 'absolutely inconceivable' is agreeable neither with human nature as we know it, nor with history, which here, as elsewhere, shews more knowledge of life than do its critics."

NOTE 9 (p. 147).—The Text of John i. 13

The textual evidence in this passage is as follows—οἱ . . . ἐγεννήθησαν is the reading of all the Greek MSS. now extant, of the Old Latin MSS. a (om. qui) c (d is wanting here, but D^{gr}. reads ἐγεννήθησαν, without οἱ) e f ff₂ q (l and r are wanting), of the Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic versions; the Greek Fathers all quote it in this form (though possibly Justin was acquainted with the other reading; see below), and of the Latins, Hilary, Ambrose (twice), Augustine (twice). ὁς . . . ἐγενήθη is the reading underlying the qui . . . natus est of the Old Latin MS. b and the Liber comicus ("Liber comicus, sive Lectionarius Missae quo Toletana Ecclesia ante annos mille et ducentos utebatur" ed. D. G. Morin; Maredsol, 1893); and the quotations in the Latin Fathers shew it to have been early and widespread. Irenaeus quotes the verse three times in this form—

APPENDED NOTES

"per Matthaeum ait, Christi autem generatio sic erat; et quoniam hic est Emmanuel, ne forte tantum eum hominem putaremus (non enim ex voluntate carnis, neque ex voluntate viri, sed ex voluntate Dei Verbum caro factum est), neque aliud quidem Jesum, alterum autem Christum suspicaremur fuisse" (iii. 16, 2); "propter hoc, generationem eius quis enarrabit? quoniam homo est, et quis agnoscet eum? Cognoscit autem illum is cui Pater qui est in caelis revelavit, ut intelligat quoniam is qui non ex voluntate carnis, neque ex voluntate viri natus est filius hominis, hic est Christus filius Dei vivi" (iii. 19, 2); cf. "non ex voluntate viri erat, qui nascebatur" (iii. 21, 5).

Tertullian (de carne Christi 19) writes—

"Quid est ergo Non ex sanguine, nec ex voluntate carnis, nec ex voluntate viri, sed ex Deo natus est? Hoc quidem capitulo ego potius utar cum adulteratores eius obduxero. Sic enim scriptum esse contendunt Non ex sanguine, nec ex carnis voluntate, nec ex viri, sed ex Deo nati sunt, quasi supradictos credentes in nomine eius designet"; cf. c. 24 "Non ex sanguine, neque ex carnis et viri voluntate, sed ex Deo natus est."

Tertullian, therefore, maintains that the singular verb is correct, and that the Valentinians have corrupted the sacred text by turning it into the plural.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

The witness of Ambrose and Augustine is not all one way. Ambrose twice (de Noe, c. 4; and de Spir. ii. 7) quotes it qui . . . nati sunt, and so also Augustine (de pecc. mer. ii.; ep. 140); but in his commentary on Ps. xxxvi., Ambrose, in speaking of the light which lighteth every man, proceeds, "hoc est, illum qui ad imaginem et similitudinem dei vivit . . . illum hominem qui sic agit, quasi in hunc mundum supervenerit, qui non ex sanguine, neque ex voluntate carnis, sed ex Deo natus sit"; here, though he is using the singular verb, he is referring the passage to the Christian disciple, not to Christ Himself. Augustine, however, in his Confessions (vii. 9) refers it unmistakably to Christ: "item legi ibi quia Verbum, Deus, non ex carne, non ex sanguine, neque ex voluntate viri, neque ex voluntate carnis, sed ex Deo natus est."

Sulpicius Severus (died c. A.D. 425) is also cited by Sabatier, "is enim (Christus) non conditione humana editus, siquidem non ex voluntate viri, sed ex Deo natus est, mundum istum . . . in nihilum rediget (Hist. ii.)."

We have mentioned Justin above; it is at least possible that he may be referring to the "Western" reading of this verse in two passages. In the 1st Apology (c. 32) he interprets Gen. xlix. 11 of our Lord, and adds τὸ δὲ εἰρημένον "αἷμα τῆς σταφυλῆς" σημαντικὸν τοῦ ἔχειν μὲν αἷμα τὸν φανησόμενον, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐξ ἀνθρωπέου σπέρματος ἀλλ' ἐκ θείας δυνάμεως . . . διὰ γὰρ παρθένου τῆς ἀπὸ τοῦ σπέρματος Ἰακώβ . . . διὰ δυνάμεως θεοῦ ἀπεκυήθη. And in the Dialogue with Trypho (c. 63) he uses the same language: περὶ οὗ καὶ Μωυσῆς τοῦ αἵματος, ὡς προέφηγ, αἵματι σταφυλῆς, ἐν παραβολῇ εἰπών, τὴν στολὴν αὐτοῦ πλυνεῖν ἔφη, ὡς τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἐξ ἀνθρωπέου σπέρματος γεγεννημένου ἀλλ' ἐκ θελήματος θεοῦ.

Full discussions on this verse may be found in Sabatier's Bibl. Sacr. Latinae Versiones Antiquae (iii. p. 388) and in Zahn's Commentary on St. John ad loc. (p. 72) where it is maintained that οἱ ἐγεννήθησαν is not original on the ground of the Greek. Why should ἐγενν. be in the aorist if it is in apposition to πιστεύουσιν?

APPENDED NOTES

Why is the relative οἷ, not οἷτινες? We may also argue that such a sentence as is given in the Received Text would be otiose, for no one, either Jew or Christian, would need to be told that the spiritual relation between God and His children was not an affair of fleshly generation. Zahn thinks that the change to the plural was due to the Valentinians. It is noteworthy that Loisy also accepts the singular reading. B. T. D. Smith, in The Parting of the Roads, p. 263, maintains that even with the Received Text the reference must be to the Virgin Birth; see also W. C. Allen, Interpreter, Oct., 1905, p. 57 f.

NOTE 10 (p. 157).—The Birth of the Buddha

Extract from letter to the Guardian, 3rd December, 1902, by Mr. Sandberg—

“None of the original standard accounts of the life of Gautama or Shakya-Muni, whether in Sanskrit, or in Pali, or in Tibetan (or even in the unreliable Chinese biographies) make any mention of a Virgin Birth. They continuously define their hero only as the son of King Shuddhodana (in Tibetan, ‘Zas-tsang’). The earlier pre-Christian writings, in the Pali Vinaya and Tibetan Dulwa, do not even mention his mother or his birth. The later expanded biographies, composed in post-Christian times, such as the Lalita Vistara of c. A.D. 250, and the Abhinishkramana Sutra of the fifth century, A.D., describe the birth at great length. They make no reference to any theory of virginity in the mother, but aver that it was decided by the Gods in the Tushita heaven that Gautama should enter his mother’s right side in the form of a six-headed elephant. As soon as he was born he walked a certain number of paces and delivered a narrative of his origin. His mother died seven days after his birth, and he was nurtured by his aunt in Shuddhodana’s palace. I fancy ‘an ordinary layman’ must have taken his information from one or other of the popular anti-Christian treatises, such as that of Paul Carus. The only basis I know of for these writers making any such statement (unless they count the elephant-story as proving their assertion) is an allegation made by the scholar Cooma de Koros, without chapter or verse, that in a Mongol narrative the virginity was alluded to. But as Mongol Buddhism is quite of modern introduction, barely 400 years old, any isolated assertion in a Mongol biography of the Founder of this faith cannot be held of the slightest weight. It could easily have been adopted by Mongol Buddhists from the Christian tenets which Marco Polo tells us were so widely spread in Mongolia in his time."

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

NOTE 11 (p. 169).—Philo on Virgin Birth

It has been suggested that the language of Philo is compatible with the idea of a sort of miraculous conception on the part of Old Testament mothers of saints, and that this may have afforded a basis for the development of the Gospel-story.

Philo's language is studiously vague and largely symbolical. He speaks of virgins and virginity, and, identifying with these some of the women of the Old Testament, correlates them with certain virtues. Thus, we read¹—

Now of the four Virtues some are always virgin, and some from having been women have changed into virgins, as Sarah did for it had ceased to be with her after the manner of women, when she began to conceive her happy offspring Isaac. . . . Moses, in strict accordance with the principles of natural philosophy, represents Leah as hated, for those whom the charms of the pleasures, which are Rachel, that is to say, the outward sense, attract, cannot be endured by Leah, who is situated out of the reach of the passions, etc.

¹ Posterity of Cain, XL.

APPENDED NOTES

And again¹—

The association of men with a view to the procreation of children makes virgins women. But when God begins to associate with the soul, he makes that which was previously woman now again virgin. Since banishing and destroying all the degenerate appetites unbecoming a human being . . . he introduces in their stead genuine and perfect unadulterated virtues ; therefore he will not converse with Sarah before all the habits, such as other women have, have left her and she has returned into the class of pure virgins.

Moses is appealed to.²

For he introduces Sarah as conceiving a son when God beheld her by Himself, but he represents her as bringing forth her son, not to Him who beheld her by Himself, but to him who was eager to attain unto wisdom, and his name is called Abraham. And he teaches the same lesson, still more plainly in the case of Leah where he says that God opened her womb. But to open the womb is the special business of the husband. And she, having conceived, brought forth not to God, for He alone is sufficient and all-abundant to Himself, but to him who underwent labour for the sake of that which is good ; so that in this instance virtue received the divine seed from the first great Cause of all things, but brought forth her offspring to one of her lovers, who deserved to be preferred to all her other suitors. And when again the all-wise Isaac addressed his supplications to God, Rebecca, who is Perseverance, became pregnant by the agency of him who received the supplication ; but Moses who received Zipporah, that is winged and sublime Virtue, without any supplication or entreaty on his part, found that she conceived by no mortal man.

In such disquisitions, it is difficult to distinguish between fact and symbol. Philo, indeed, uses the text—the facts, persons, and data given by the narrative—for allegorizing purposes. It is also clear from other passages that, without denying human paternity, divine generation is asserted in the special cases referred to by Philo; that is to say, divine and human agency coexist in generation in these cases. Thus, at beginning of Ch. lxxvii. of The Allegories, Abraham is spoken of as the veritable father of Isaac; but later on the paternity is ascribed to God. But this only means that God is the Father of perfect nature symbolized by Isaac, who is the pattern of happiness in the soul. The real Philonic view, therefore, seems to be that in the case of certain saintly men, eminent as patterns of virtue, or symbolic of such, a divine paternity is alleged, which, however, does not exclude human generation, but uses it as an instrument. The birth is brought about, and is presided over, by divine power, but, in its physical aspect, is perfectly natural. Some would apply this explanation to the Birth of Our Lord, and say that He was conceived by the Holy Spirit, but without denying the paternity of Joseph.

¹ Cherubim, XIV.

² Cherubim, XIII.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

This view, however, fails to account for the plain statements of a purely historical narrative, such as the Birth-Narratives of the First and Third Gospels are. These narratives and Philo's allegories are separated by a wide gulf. As Dr. Gore has said¹—

“The mystical gnosticizing manner of Philo is wholly alien to the spirit both of the Old Testament and the New. We notice, for example, that when St. Paul is speaking in the case of Isaac of a ‘birth after the spirit’ (Gal. iv. 22, 29), he shows no tendency to pass like Philo to the idea of ‘virginity.’ . . . Further, there is no evidence justifying the belief that such a mode of thought as is found in Philo existed in the Palestinian Judaism out of which the narratives of the nativity have their origin.”

Whatever may be the fact as to Philo's influence upon the Fourth Gospel—

¹ Dissertations, p. 62 f.

APPENDED NOTES

“ it may be taken for certain that he did not influence the language of the authorities upon which St. Matthew and St. Luke depend. On the whole we may say that there is no connexion at all probable between the thoughts and language of the narratives of the nativity and the speculations of Philo about spiritual virginity.”

[The question is discussed, and reference is made to other discussions, in Thorburn's Virgin Birth, pp. 11 ff. ; cf. also Gore Dissertations, pp. 61-63, and an article on “ Philo's Doctrine of the Divine Father and the Virgin Mother ” (containing a tabulated collection of some three hundred citations from Philo in English), published in the A J T ix, pp. 491-518 (July, 1905).]

NOTE 12 (p. 178).—Parthenogenesis

Those who are interested in the scientific aspects of parthenogenesis may be referred to a brief, but useful, summary of evidence contained in Thorburn's Virgin Birth (Appendix G, pp. 169-174). The application of this explanation to Our Lord's Birth was made by Dean Freemantle in an address given to the Churchmen's Union in October, 1901. He said—

“ In Darwin's book on the changes of Plants and Animals under Domestication, he points out that Parthenogenesis is found much higher than is generally known in the organized creation, and he asks why the operation of the male is required, the germ or ovum of the female being complete in itself. He answers that he can give no reason except, probably, that force and energy are thus added. If, then, the accounts in the Gospels . . . are true literally, the meaning of my suggestion would be that the yearnings of a young Hebrew woman, longing with intense and holy desire to be the mother of the Messiah (which longings were the direct action of the Holy Spirit) excited and quickened the germ within her, and produced in this case what is usually produced by the action of the male. This seems to me the only meaning that can be got out of the words of St. Luke, unless you are to 'invoke the word miracle.' ”

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

This theory is criticized by Dr. Briggs¹ as follows—

“ The Church has never thought of any such thing as parthenogenesis. The doctrine based on St. Luke, as given in the Apostles' Creed, is : Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary. . . . A parthenogenesis would give us an individual man with a human personality, and therefore be just as much against the Christian faith as the natural fatherhood of Joseph. Hippolytus says (Comm. Luke ii. 7) : ‘ The Word was the first-born of God who came down from heaven to the blessed Mary and was made a first-born man in her womb.’ . . . The Gospels make the Holy Spirit the active agent.”

NOTE 13 (p. 182).—The Brethren of the Lord

The three principal theories regarding the relationship of Our Lord to His “brethren” are known as the Epiphanian, the Helvidian, and the Hieronymian (Jerome's). They are thus briefly and broadly defined by Lightfoot (Galatians, Dissertation II)—

“ In the early ages of the Church, two conflicting opinions were held regarding the relationship of those who in the Gospels and Apostolic Epistles are termed “the brethren of the Lord.” On the one hand, it was maintained that no blood relationship existed ; that these brethren were in fact sons of Joseph by a former wife, before he espoused the Virgin ; and that they are therefore called the Lord's brethren only in the same way in which Joseph is called His father, having really no claim to this title, but being so designated by an exceptional use of the term adapted to the exceptional fact of the miraculous incarnation.¹ On the other hand, certain persons argued that the obvious meaning of the term was the correct meaning, and that these brethren were the Lord's brethren as truly as Mary was the Lord's mother, being her sons by her husband Joseph.² The former of these views was held by the vast majority of orthodox believers and by not a few heretics, the latter was the opinion of a Father of the Church here and there, to whom it occurred as the natural inference from the language of Scripture, as Tertullian, for instance, and of certain sects and individuals who set themselves against the incipient worship of the Virgin or the one-sided asceticism of the day, and to whom, therefore, it was a very serviceable weapon of controversy.

¹ Art. The Virgin Birth of Our Lord, in AJT xii, 406 f. (1908).

APPENDED NOTES

"Such was the state of opinion, when towards the close of the fourth century Jerome struck out a novel hypothesis. Helvidius, who lived in Rome, had attacked the prevailing view of the superiority of virgin over married life, and in doing so had laid great stress on the example of the Lord's mother who had borne children to her husband. In or about the year 383, Jerome, then a young man, at the instigation of 'the brethren' wrote a treatise in reply to Helvidius, in which he put forward his own view. He maintained that the Lord's brethren were His cousins after the flesh, being sons of Mary the wife of Alphaeus and sister of the Virgin. Thus, as he boasted, he asserted the virginity not of Mary only, but of Joseph also."

The matter is fully discussed, and the various arguments

¹ This is the Epiphanian theory.

² This is the Helvidian theory.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

examined, by Lightfoot in the Dissertation referred to, and he concludes in favour of the Epiphanian theory. He lays special stress on one point—

“ Our Lord in His dying moments commended His mother to the keeping of St. John : ‘ Woman, behold thy son.’ The injunction was forthwith obeyed, and ‘ from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home ’ (John xix. 26, 27). Yet according to the Helvidian view she had no less than four sons besides daughters living at the time. Is it conceivable that our Lord would thus have snapped asunder the most sacred ties of natural affection ? The difficulty is not met by the fact that her own sons were still unbelievers. This fact would scarcely have been allowed to override the paramount duties of filial piety. But even when so explained, what does this hypothesis require us to believe ? Though within a few days a special appearance is vouchsafed to one of these brethren, who is destined to rule the mother Church of Jerusalem, and all alike are converted to the faith of Christ ; yet she, their mother, living in the same city and joining with them in a common worship (Acts i. 14), is consigned to the care of a stranger of whose house she becomes henceforth the inmate.”¹

If the Epiphanian theory is right, the “ Brethren ” of Our Lord will be foster-brothers older than Himself. Joseph, their father, probably died during Our Lord’s boyhood, or early manhood.

Dr. J. B. Mayor also discusses the question at length in his Epistle of St. James, and strongly maintains there the Helvidian view. The Hieronymian view is ably defended by Dom J. Chapman in the Journal of Theol. Studies, Vol. VII (April, 1906), p. 412 f.

¹ Galatians 258 f.

APPENDED NOTES

NOTE 14 (p. 195).—A “reduced” Christology and a “reduced” Christianity

Dr. Briggs has trenchantly stated the issues as follows¹—

“It is not merely the Virgin Birth that is in question, in the interest of the more complete humanity of our Lord, it is also the doctrine of original sin and the sinlessness of Jesus: it is also his bodily resurrection and ascension, and the giving of his body in the Eucharist. It is, moreover, the whole nature of the atonement and Christian salvation with its doctrine of sacrifice and propitiation. All of these doctrines are trembling in the balance in those very minds which doubt or deny the Virgin Birth. Those who give up the Virgin Birth will be compelled by logical and irresistible impulse eventually to give up all of these.

“Jesus Christ was man, but not an individual man, altogether like other men. He was unique in his humanity, because he is the only God-man. The centre of his complex being was not human but divine. Jesus Christ became man to identify himself with man and nature for ever. If Jesus were only loosely connected with the divine being within him, if the union were merely an ethical one, then there could not have been any real sacrifice for the sins of the world; his death would be only that of a martyr and his blood have only educational value. If the Son of God were only loosely joined with the man Jesus, a resurrection of his body would be useless, and if no resurrection of the body, then no giving of his body in any sense in the holy Eucharist, and that most sacred sacrament of our religion would become merely a love feast. A second advent and a World Judgment also disappear from the scheme of such a theology. And what have we left? A religion such as the brilliant Harnack gives us in his Essence of Christianity, a quintessence, indeed, but with all the life and glory of Christianity squeezed out of it, a religion such as never has existed, and never can exist, except in speculative brains.

¹ Art. The Virgin Birth of Our Lord, A J T, xii. 209 f.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

“I do not mean to say that men may not hold to many, if not the most, of the essential doctrines of our religion without belief in the Virgin Birth; but I do say that the very same influences which lead some men to discard the Virgin Birth lead others to discard, some, one of these doctrines, some, others; and that these are really to the logical mind all linked together in one massive chain, a comprehensive whole, the historical faith of the Christian Church; not of any one denomination of Christians, but of them all; not as special to any particular age, but as the one faith transmitted from Christ and his apostles; not merely dogma, but the vital experience of all generations of Christians for nineteen centuries.”

INDEX

I. NAMES AND SUBJECTS'

- ABBREVIATIONS in Greek MSS., 117, 227
- Acrostic (on name David), 13
- Alexander Jannaeus, 204
- Allen (W. C.) quoted, 12 f., 24
- Ambrose cited, 230
- Amon-Hotep, 170
- Angelic appearances, 185 f.
- Anna ("prophetess"), 100 f.
- Anna (mother of the Virgin), 125
- Antioch (Roman colony), 64 f.
- Apocryphal Gospels, 4 f., 121, 134 (cf. ch. VI passim)
- , dogmatic interest in, 124
- Archelaus, 61
- Aristides (apologist), 152
- Astrology, 20 f., 26, 27, 221 f.
- Augustine cited, 230
- Augustus, birthday celebrations in honour of, 70
- BABYLONIAN influence, 163 ff.
- Badham cited, 16, 218
- Balaam prototype of Jesus in Jewish literature, 205
- Baptist, followers of the, and Jewish Christians (see also John Baptist), 182 f.
- Bar-Kokba, 28
- "ben" ("bar") in patronymics, 139 f.
- Bethune-Baker quoted, 189 ff.
- Bethlehem, permanent home of Joseph, 56 ff.
- Bethlehem, 51 ff., 111 ff.
- , home of Christ-legend, 78 ff.
- Betrothal and marriage, differences between Galilee and Judaea in regard to, 209, 213 f.
- , ceremonies in, 211 f.
- Birth of Messiah, Jewish legend of, 81 f.
- of Jesus, secret of, 137, 186
- in Jewish legend, (see further Date), 199 ff.
- "Brethren" of Jesus, 182, 236 ff.
- Bridechamber, sons of the, 213
- Briggs quoted, 37, 43 f., 67 f., 177 f., 180 f., 189, 236, 239 f.
- Buddha, birth of the, 157, 231 f.
- Burkitt, F. C., quoted, 28 f.
- CALUMNY, Jewish, regarding birth of Jesus, 186 f.
- Carpenter, J. Estlin, quoted, 36, 154, 170 f., 176 f.
- Cave (of Nativity), 60, 73 f., 84, 86, 129
- cultus, 84 f.
- stables, 74
- Caves, in Mithraic worship, 86, 162
- Census (see Enrolment)
- Cheyne, T. K., quoted, 162 ff.
- Chronology, the, 109–120
- Citations, Scriptural, in St. Matthew, 20
- Cloud, Theophanic, 37
- Creed, the Roman, and Virgin Birth, 151
- Crowns worn by bride and bridegroom, 212
- "Consecrate" (in betrothal), 210
- "Consolation" (Messianic term) (see Menaḥem), 104
- DALMAN quoted, 5, 16, 42 f.
- Date of Jesus' birth, 114 f., 119 f.
- "Dayspring" = šemaḥ, 46 f.

INDEX

- Decalogue, sequence of commands in, 9 f.
 Delitzsch, Franz, quoted, 223
 Driver, S. R., quoted, 12
 Duumvir, office of, 64 f.
- EBIONITES and Virgin Birth, 153
 Edersheim quoted, 27, 94, 209
 Egypt, Jesus in, 22 f., 205
 —, Census in, 56
 Egyptian kings, birth of, 170 f.
 Elieser b. Hyrkanos, 22
 Emmet, C. W., quoted, 226
 Enoch, Book of, cited, 102, 112
 Enrolment (see also papyri), 52 f., 111, 117 f.
- FARRAR, F. W., quoted, 12
 Fatherhood, legal, of Joseph, 15
 Findlay quoted, 128 ff.
 First-born son, a predestined priest (see also Redemption), 97
 Fotheringham, J. K., quoted, 26
- GALILEE (see also Betrothal), 61 f.
 Gematria (see also Acrostic), 13
 Genealogies, Book of, 200
 Genealogy in First Gospel, 12 ff.
 —, the Lukan, 38 f., 150
 Gore, Bp., quoted, 187 ff.
 Gressmann quoted, 71 ff., 108, 157 ff.
 Gunkel quoted, 38, 80, 174
- HADRIAN, 85
 Haggada, meaning of, 123
 Halévy quoted, 17
 Harnack quoted, 152 f., 156 f.
 Hartland referred to, 154
 Headlam quoted, 136 f., 149, 194
- Hebrew Messianic terms, 23
 Hebrew original of Matt. i., 20 f., 9, 49 (see also Poetry)
 Hebrews, Gospel according to the, 122
 Herod I, 60 ff.
 — Antipas, marriage of, with Herodias, 117 ff.
 Hisda Rab., 202
 Hoben quoted, 3, 17 f.
 Holy Spirit (= power of God), 37
 Homage, Gentile, 24 f.
 Homonades, the, 64 f.
 Huppa (bridal canopy), 212
 Hymns, Jewish synagogue, 45
- IGNATIUS, ST., cited, 151 f.
 Immanuel, 17, 82
 Incarnation (see Virgin Birth)
 Inconsistencies of statement in Gospel narratives, 3 f.
 Inn (see Khan)
 Irenaeus cited, 220 f., 229
- JEROME cited, 205
 Joachim (father of the Virgin), 25
 Joanna (wife of Chuza), 180
 John Baptist, narrative of the birth of (see also Baptist and Name), 40
 Jose bar Hanina, 222
 Joseph, point of view of, reflected in Matt. i., 179
 Josephus cited, 21, 52, 53, 108, 110 f., 114 ff., 222
 Joshua b. Perahya, 203 f.
 Judas the Galilean, 110 f., 114
 Justin Martyr cited, 28, 48, 73 f., 86, 152, 154 f., 161 f., 166, 219 f., 230
- KADDISH (Jewish prayer) cited, 112
 —, influence of, 185
 Keim quoted, 109

INDEX

- Khan, 58, 74, 86
κατάλυμα, meaning of, 59 f.
 Kingship of Christ, 13
 Klausner quoted, 82
 Krauss, Dr. S., quoted, 199 ff.
- LAKE, Kirsopp, quoted, 115 ff.
 Legends, development of, 78
 — and history, 171
 Lights at wedding feast, 213
 Lobstein quoted, 176
 Löw quoted, 90, 223
- MAGI, 20 f.
 Magical powers (of Jesus), 22
 Magnificat, the, 41, 226 f.
 Marriage (see Betrothal) — (of the Virgin), (cf. Appendix II), 225
 Martin, Raymond, 219
 Mary, prominence of, in St. Luke, 106 —, point of view of, reflected in St. Luke, 179 f.
 —, daughter of Eli, 203
 Menahem, symbolical name of the Messiah, 82, 166
 Merx, Ad., quoted, 10
 Messiah, earthly pre-existence of, 83, 165 ff.
 Messianic hope, the, 183 f.
 Midrash in New Testament, 12
 —, esp. in Matt. I–II, 12, 19, 20
 Miriam, the women's hair-dresser, 202 f.
 Mithra, birth legend of, 161 f.
 Mommsen quoted, 64
 Moses a type of the Messiah and redemption, 20, 24, 164
 — ha-Darshan, 219 f.
 Myths, heathen, 155 f.
- NAME given at circumcision, 88 f., 223
 — given to John Baptist, 223
- Nativity, month of the, 58
- Nativity Narrative an integral part of First Gospel, 10 f.
 Nazarene, meaning of, 23, 28–33
 Nazareth, home originally of Mary (not of Joseph), 57 f.
 —, alleged birthplace of Jesus, 144 f.
 Nicanor, Gate of, 94
- ORIGEN cited, 22, 200
 Orr, Prof., quoted, 195
 Osiris, birth of, 158 f.
- PAGAN superstitions and Jesus, 173
 Pandira (and variants), 200 ff.
 Panther, the, in popular superstition, 201
 Pappus ben Judah, 202
 Papyri, evidence of for periodic enrolments, 54, 56
 Paul, St., chronology of life of, 111 — and Virgin Birth, 149 f.
 Peace, the Messianic, 70
 Perseus, legend of, 154 f.
 Perversions, Jewish, of Gospel statements, 199 ff., 204, 206
 Philo on Virgin Birth, 232 ff.
 Plutarch cited, 158 ff.
 Poetry, Hebrew, in St. Luke, 43 f., 67 ff., 180 ff., 184 f.
 Pre-existence (see Messiah)
 Presentation of Jesus in the Temple, 96 ff.
Protevangelium Jacobi, 3, 84, 124 f.
 Purification of mother after childbirth, 89 f., 93 f., 95
- QUIETISTS in Israel, 142
 Quirinius, 52 f., 64 ff., 110 f., 114
- RAMSAY, Prof., quoted, 53, 55, 64 f., 180
 Redeemer, World, 24, 164 f.

INDEX

- Redemption from sin (Messianic) (see also Moses), 9, 20, 100
 — of first-born (see also First-born), 89 ff.
- SABINUS, 114
 Salvation, Messianic (see Redemption (from sin))
 Sanday quoted, 171, 193 ff.
 Sargon of Agade, birth of, 164
 Saturninus, 65, 119 f.
 Schechter quoted, 7, 21, 95, 97
 Schmiedel quoted, 140 ff., 144 f.
 Schürer quoted, 55
Semah (see "Dayspring")
 Silence, argument from, 135 ff.
 Simeon, 100 f.
 — b. 'Azzai, 200
 Smith, Prof. G. A., quoted, 86
 Spitta quoted, 58, 59, 109–113
 Solomon, Odes of, referred to, 153
 Soltau quoted, 2, 42, 70 f., 156, 173 f.
 Son of God, 38 f.
 "Son of Mary," 139 f.
 Sotades (Greek poet), 201
 Star (of the Messiah), 8, 21, 24 ff.
 —, astronomical identification of the, 26 f.
 Ştada (name given to Jesus), 199 ff.
 Stanton quoted, 220
 Stapfer quoted, 212 f.
 Sulpicius Severus cited, 230
- Summarizing phrases in St. Luke, 62, 105 f.
 Swaddling clothes, 159 f.
 Syria (= Palestine), 10
- TATIAN, 63
 Taxation, 55
 Temple, women in the, 104
 Tertullian cited, 66, 118 f., 229
Toledoth Jeshu, 206 f.
- ULPIAN cited, 59
 Usener quoted, 2, 3, 34, 40 f.
- VIRGIN (παρθένος), 16
 —, Meaning of, 168 f.
 — in heathen mythology, 163 ff.
 "Virgin of the Lord" (applied to Mary), 126
 Virgin Birth of the Messiah, 16, 80, 175, 218–221
 — —, the, no part of the Apostolic Preaching, 136 f.
 — — and Incarnation, 137, 141, 148, 152, 187 ff.
 — — and Fourth Gospel, 145 ff. (see also Paul, St.) Virginity, 168 f.
- WEBER, W., quoted, 114 f.
 Weiss quoted, 170
 World King (see also Redeemer, World), 75
 Wright, A., quoted, 9, 186
 Wünsche quoted, 21
- ZAHN quoted, 19, 25, 230 f.

INDEX

II. REFERENCES TO SCRIPTURE

(a) THE OLD TESTAMENT.

Genesis.										PAGE
xxix.	27	213
xliv.	11	219
Exodus.
xiii.	12	96
xiii.	2, 13, 32	89
xx.	11, 29	89
xxi.	20	89
xl.	35	37
Numbers.
xviii.	15-16	89, 93
xxiv.	17	7 f.,	21,	25,	27 f.,	48, 201
Deuteronomy.
xviii.	15	21
xxxii.	13	19
Judges.
xiv.	12	213
Ruth.
iv.	11	213
1 Samuel.
ii.	26	108
1 Kings.
xi.	26	240
Canticles.
iii.	11	212
Psalms.
ii.	7	175 f.,	219
lxviii.	29	22
lxxii.	10	25
cx.	1-2	68
cx.	3	218
cxlvi.	7	123
Isaiah.
iv.	3	47
vii.	14 (lxx.)	16, 163, 169,	221
ix.	1 f.	31, 69
xi.	1	23, 31,	33
xi.	6	123

INDEX

	Isaiah—(continued).	PAGE
xxxii. 6	.	86
xxxii. 15	.	36
xlix. 6	.	31, 101
liii. 2	.	218
liii. 8	.	219
lx. 3 f.	.	22, 25
lxi. 10	.	212

	Jeremiah.	PAGE
ii. 32	.	212
xxiii. 5	.	23, 46

	Ezekiel.	PAGE
xvi. 4	.	160
xvi. 11-13	.	212

	Hosea.	PAGE
xi. 1	.	19

	Micah.	PAGE
v. 2-4	.	69

	Zechariah.	PAGE
iii. 8; vi. 12	.	23, 46
ix. 10	.	69

(b) APOCRYPHA.

	Tobit.	PAGE
vii. 18	.	213

(c) NEW TESTAMENT.

	Matthew.	PAGE
i. 16 (reading)	.	15, 215 ff.
ix. 15	.	213
xiii. 55	.	139
xxii. 17	.	55
xxiv. 27	.	43, 44
xxv. 11 f.	.	212

	Mark.	PAGE
iii. 21 (31 f.) and parallels	.	140 f., 228
vi. 2 f.	.	139

	Luke.	PAGE
i. 34-38 (text of)	.	224 ff.
ii. 5	.	225
iv. 22	.	139

INDEX

	John.	PAGE
i. 13 (text of)	.	228
i. 45	.	139
ii. 3-5	.	142
vii. 12	.	205
vii. 27	.	165
vii. 41, 42	.	22, 83
viii. 41	.	201

	Romans.
i. 3	.	149

	Galatians.
iv. 4	.	149

	Ephesians.
v. 14	.	48

	Revelation.
xii.	.	150 f., 163 ff.

III. REFERENCES TO THE RABBINICAL LITERATURE

	MISHNA.
Kethuboth xiii. 10	.	214
Bekhoroth viii. 1	.	98
" viii. 6	.	92
Tamid v. 6	.	94
Nega'im xiv. 12	.	94

	THE TALMUDS.
T.B. Berakhoth 31a	.	213
T.J. " ii. 5a	.	81
T.B. Shabbath 104b	.	202, 205
T.B. Pesahim (end)	.	91
T.B. Sanhedrin 98b	.	83, 166
T.B. " 101b	.	21
T.B. " 107b	.	203 f.
T.J. " vii. 25d	.	201
T.B. 'Aboda zara 16b, 17a	.	22
T.B. Kiddushin 57b	.	107
T.B. " 70a	.	201
T.J. Hagiga 77d	.	203
Kalla 18b	.	203

	MIDRASHIM.
Exodus rabba i.	.	165
" " to Ex. i. 21	.	221 ff.
Qoheleth rabba (to Eccles. i. 8)	.	22
Pesikta rabbati xxxiv.	.	105

Printed by Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd., Bath, England
(2373)

PITMAN'S CATALOGUE

OF

GENERAL

LITERATURE

CONTENTS

	PAGE
ART	2
BIOGRAPHY	2
DAINTY VOLUME LIBRARY	4
FICTION	5
HISTORY	5
MISCELLANEOUS	6
NATURAL HISTORY, ETC.	9
POETRY, CRITICISM, AND LITERARY HISTORY	10
SCIENCE	11
THEOLOGY	11
TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY	16

SIR ISAAC PITMAN & SONS, LTD.

(Incorporating Isbister & Co.)

1 AMEN CORNER, LONDON, E.C.
AND AT BATH, NEW YORK AND MELBOURNE

PITMAN'S

CATALOGUE OF GENERAL LITERATURE

ART

GREAT PAINTERS OF THE 19th CENTURY AND THEIR PAINTINGS. By LÉONCE BÉNÉDITE, Keeper of the Musée National de Luxembourg. With over 400 illustrations and 13 coloured plates. In large demy 4to, cloth gilt, gilt top. 10s. 6d. net.

MODERN PAINTERS AND THEIR PAINTINGS. By SARAH TYTLER. For the use of Schools and Learners in Art. In crown 8vo, quarter cloth gilt. 4s. 6d.

THE OLD MASTERS AND THEIR PICTURES. By the same Author. For the use of Schools and Learners in Art. New and enlarged edition. In crown 8vo, quarter cloth gilt. 4s. 6d.

THE ORGAN AND ITS MASTERS. A short account of the most celebrated organists of former days, and of the present time, together with a brief sketch of the development of organ construction, organ music, and organ playing. By HENRY C. LAHEE. In large crown 8vo, cloth richly gilt, gilt top, with 14 full-page plate illustrations. 6s. net.

MODERN COMPOSERS OF EUROPE. Being an account of the most recent musical progress in the various European nations with some notes on their history, and critical and biographical sketches of the contemporary musical leaders in each country. By ARTHUR ELSON. In large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, with 24 full-page plate illustrations. 6s. net.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM: ITS HISTORY AND TREASURES. A view of the origins of that great Institution, sketches of its Early Benefactors and Principal Officers, and a survey of the priceless objects preserved within its walls. By HENRY C. SHELLEY, Author of "Inns and Taverns of Old London." With 50 illustrations. Size 6½ in. by 9½ in., cloth gilt, gilt top. 12s. 6d. net.

BIOGRAPHY, ETC.

WHO'S WHO IN THE THEATRE. A Biographical Record of the Contemporary Stage, including a new Section, "Who's Who in Variety." Compiled and Edited by JOHN PARKER. New, Revised, and Enlarged Edition. In large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 1,157 pp. 10s. 6d. net.

The new issue contains a special biographical section dealing with the Variety and Entertainment world, under the title of "Who's Who in Variety." In addition, there is a complete list of plays which have secured a run of more than one hundred performances on the London stage; a calendar of notable theatrical events; a list of the more important productions of the London stage from the earliest times; Genealogical Tables of famous theatrical families, compiled by Mr. J. M. Bulloch, the Editor of The Graphic; a most exhaustive Dramatic and Musical Obituary; full particulars of the principal theatres in London, New York and Paris, with the seating plans of the leading London theatres, etc.

BIOGRAPHY (contd.)

WHO'S WHO IN MUSIC. A Biographical Record of Contemporary Musicians. Compiled and Edited by H. SAXE WYNDHAM and GEOFFREY L'EPINE. Second Edition, revised and enlarged. Large crown 8vo, cloth. 6s. net.

Contains 1,300 biographies of the leading British, American, Continental, and Colonial Musicians, including Concert and Opera Singers, Concert Agents, Critics, Managers, with detailed accounts of their careers. There are many other features of interest and value

FRED JOHNS'S ANNUAL. Mainly a biographical record of Australasia's prominent people (incorporating Who is Who in Australasia). By FRED JOHNS, F.J.I. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with 13 full-page portraits. 6s. net.

JOHN BUNYAN: His Life, Times and Work. By the Rev. JOHN BROWN, B.A., D.D. With portrait and illustrations by WHYMPER. Cheap edition. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt. 7s. 6d. (See also Dainty Volume Library, page 5.)

THE LIFE OF DANTE. By the late E. H. PLUMPTRE, D.D., Dean of Wells. Edited by ARTHUR JOHN BUTLER. In foolscap 8vo, lambskin gilt, 2s. 6d. net. Also in cloth, 1s. 6d. net.

BISHOP WALSHAM HOW. A Memoir. By his Son, FREDERICK DOUGLAS HOW. Cheap Edition. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 6s.

GEORGE MACDONALD. A Biographical and Critical Appreciation. By JOSEPH JOHNSON. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 2s. 6d. net.

THE LIFE OF SIR ISAAC PITMAN (Inventor of Phonography). By ALFRED BAKER. "Centenary Edition." In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with about 50 illustrations, including photogravure and steel plates. 2s. 6d. net.

REMINISCENCES OF MY LIFE. By Sir CHARLES SANTLEY. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, with 15 illustrations. 16s. net.

LIFE OF REGINALD POLE. By MARTIN HAILE. Second, Revised, and Cheaper edition. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with 8 illustrations. 7s. 6d. net.

AN ELIZABETHAN CARDINAL: William Allen. By the same Author. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, with 2 photogravure plates, 7 full-page plate illustrations, and a contemporary map. 16s. net.

BIOGRAPHY (contd.)

FÉNELON : His Life and Works. By the late PAUL JANET. Translated and Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Victor Leuliette. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with frontispiece. 5s. net.

THE TRAGEDY OF TWO STUARTS. James I of Scotland and his daughter Margaret. By MILDRED CARNEGIE. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 3s. 6d. net.

GILBERT, SULLIVAN, AND D'OYLY CARTE. With Reminiscences of other famous Savoyards. By FRANÇOIS CELLIER and CUNNINGHAM BRIDGEMAN. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, about 70 illustrations. 12s. 6d. net.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF EDWARD YOUNG. By HENRY C. SHELLEY, Author of "Inns and Taverns of Old London," etc., etc. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, photogravure frontispiece, and other illustrations. 12s. 6d. net.

FAMOUS WAR CORRESPONDENTS. By F. LAURISTON BULLARD. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with 18 illustrations. 7s. 6d. net.

WILLIAM HOWARD RUSSELL, ARCHIBALD FORBES, FREDERIC VILLIERS, BENNET BURLEIGH, EDMOND O'DONOVAN, EDWARD F. KNIGHT, G. W. STEEVENS, and WINSTON CHURCHILL are among the notable journalists whose biographies figure in the pages of this volume.

THE POETS LAUREATE OF ENGLAND. Their History and Their Odes. By W. FORBES GRAY. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, illustrated. 7s. 6d. net.

THE IRISH ABROAD. A Record of the Achievements of Wanderers from Ireland. By ELLIOT O'DONNELL. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with eight illustrations. 7s. 6d. net.

DAINTY VOLUME LIBRARY

Each in foolscap 8vo, limp lambskin gilt, gilt top, with Photogravure Frontispiece. 2s. 6d. per volume net.

DANTE. THE DIVINA COMMEDIA AND CANZONIERE. Translated by the late DEAN PLUMPTRE. With Notes, Studies, Estimates, and Life. In five volumes.

THE LIFE OF DANTE. By the same Author. In one volume.

THE TRAGEDIES OF AESCHYLOS. Translated by DEAN PLUMPTRE. In two volumes.

THE TRAGEDIES OF SOPHOCLES. Translated by DEAN PLUMPTRE. In two volumes.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON. (Abridged.) With an Introduction by G. K. CHESTERTON. In two volumes.

DAINTY VOLUME LIBRARY (contd.)

- THE POETRY OF ROBERT BROWNING. By STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D. In two volumes.
- TENNYSON : HIS ART AND RELATION TO MODERN LIFE. By STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D. In two volumes.
- JOHN BUNYAN : HIS LIFE, TIMES AND WORK. By JOHN BROWN, D.D. In two volumes.
- CLOUGH, ARNOLD, ROSSETTI, AND MORRIS : A Study. By STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D. In one volume, with four illustrations, 306 pp. 3s. 6d. net.

FICTION

- BY WHAT AUTHORITY ? By ROBERT HUGH BENSON. 6s.
- THE LIGHT INVISIBLE. By ROBERT HUGH BENSON. 3s. 6d.
- RICHARD RAYNAL, SOLITARY. By ROBERT HUGH BENSON. 3s. 6d.
- THE KING'S ACHIEVEMENT. By ROBERT HUGH BENSON. 6s.
- THE QUEEN'S TRAGEDY. By ROBERT HUGH BENSON. 6s.
- THE SENTIMENTALISTS. By ROBERT HUGH BENSON. 6s.
- A MIRROR OF SHALOTT. By ROBERT HUGH BENSON. 6s.
- LORD OF THE WORLD. By ROBERT HUGH BENSON. 6s.
- THE HEART OF A MAN. A powerful story dealing with the social and economic problems of the day. By R. A. MAHER. 6s.
- ANNE OF GREEN GABLES. By L. M. MONTGOMERY. 6s.
- ANNE OF AVONLEA. By the same Author. Coloured frontispiece. 6s.
- ANNE OF THE ISLAND. By the same Author. 6s.
- THE STORY GIRL. By the same Author. Coloured frontispiece. 6s.
- POLLYANNA. The "Glad" Book. By ELEANOR H. PORTER. Illustrated. 6s.
- POLLYANNA GROWS UP. The Second "Glad" Book. By the same Author. With 8 illustrations. 6s.
- CALLED TO THE BAR. A Story of the Middle Temple. By J. WELLS THATCHER. 3s. 6d.

HISTORY

- THE FRANCO-PRUSSIAN WAR AND ITS HIDDEN CAUSES. By the late ÉMILE OLLIVIER, of the Académie française. Translated from the French with an Introduction and Notes by G. BURNHAM IVES. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with 8 illustrations, 558 pp. 8s. 6d. net.

HISTORY (contd.)

THE HISTORY OF BELGIUM (1815-1865), Waterloo to the Death of Leopold I. With Synopsis of Belgian History from Caesar to Waterloo. New Edition. By DEMETRIUS C. BOULGER, Author of "Belgium of the Belgians," "Holland of the Dutch," etc., etc. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with 21 illustrations. 18s. net.

THE DISSOLUTION OF THE MONASTERIES. As illustrated by the Suppression of the Religious Houses of Staffordshire. By FRANCIS AIDAN HIBBERT, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge; Headmaster of Denstone. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 5s. net.

MAKERS OF NATIONAL HISTORY. Edited by the Ven. W. H. HUTTON, B.D. Each volume in this series—the aim of which is to do fuller justice to men whose lives have not hitherto been adequately dealt with—is in crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with a frontispiece. 3s. 6d. net.

CARDINAL BEAUFORT. By the Rev. L. B. RADFORD, D.D.

VISCOUNT CASTLEREAGH. By ARTHUR HASSALL, M.A.

ARCHBISHOP PARKER. By W. M. KENNEDY, B.A.

GENERAL WOLFE. By EDWARD SALMON.

FRANCIS ATTERBURY, Bishop of Rochester (1662-1732). By the Very Rev. H. C. BEECHING, M.A., Litt.D., Dean of Norwich.

EDWARD THE FOURTH. By LAURENCE STRATFORD, B.A.

THOMAS BECKET, Archbishop of Canterbury. By the Ven. W. H. HUTTON, B.D., Canon of Peterborough, and Archdeacon of Northampton.

MISCELLANEOUS

THE DREDGING OF GOLD PLACERS. By J. E. HODGSON, F.R.G.S. With 17 illustrations. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 5s. net. Principally intended for Company Directors, Property Managers, Prospectors, and the investing public.

CHART OF THE NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE ACTS. A new system showing the workings of the Act on a single sheet. Size 41 in. by 31 in., printed in colours on paper, in stout envelope. 1s. net; mounted on linen, varnished, with rollers and tape for hanging. 3s. 6d. net.

NATIONAL INSURANCE ACTS, 1911 and 1913; MEDICAL AND SANATORIUM BENEFIT REGULATIONS, Etc. Edited by J. HENRY LLOYD, for Charts, Ltd. Containing the full text of the clauses in the Acts and Regulations, together with the principal Memoranda, Circulars, etc., issued by the Insurance Commissioners, concerning Medical and Sanatorium Benefits. Classified in a practical manner for the use of Doctors, Chemists, Members and

MISCELLANEOUS (contd.)

Officials of Insurance Committees, Approved Society Officials, etc. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 236 pp., with indexes and tabbed guides for reference. 5s. net.

DOMESTIC SERVANTS AND THE INSURANCE ACTS. A Guide for Mistresses and Servants. By J. HENRY LLOYD. In foolscap 8vo. 9d. net.

FAMOUS SPEECHES. First Series. From Cromwell to Gladstone. Selected and Edited with Introductory Notes by HERBERT PAUL. In demy 8vo, cloth, 470 pp. 7s. 6d. net.

FAMOUS SPEECHES. Second Series. From Lord Macaulay to Lord Rosebery. Selected and Edited with Introductory Notes by HERBERT PAUL. In demy 8vo, cloth, 398 pp. 7s. 6d. net.

CLEAR THINKING, or An Englishman's Creed. By L. CECIL SMITH, M.A. (Oxon), F.R.C.I. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 3s 6d. net.

SOCIALISM. By Professor ROBERT FLINT, LL.D. New, Revised and Cheaper Edition. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt. 6s. net.

WHAT IS SOCIALISM? By "SCOTSBURN." An attempt to examine the principles and policy propounded by the advocates of Socialism. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt. 7s. 6d.

THE SOCIAL WORKERS' GUIDE. A Handbook of Information and Counsel for all who are interested in Public Welfare. Edited by the Rev. J. B. HALDANE, M.A., Secretary of the Southwark Diocesan Social Service Committee, with assistance from Fifty Experts. In crown 8vo, cloth, 500 pp., with over 500 articles. 3s. 6d. net.

THE FEDERAL SYSTEMS OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE BRITISH EMPIRE. Their Origin, Nature, and Development. By A. P. POLEY, B.A., of the Inner Temple and Midland Circuit, Barrister-at-Law. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt. 12s. 6d. net.

THE PERSIAN PROBLEM. By H. J. WHIGHAM. With maps and illustrations. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt. 12s. 6d.

SCIENCE AND THE CRIMINAL. By C. AINSWORTH MITCHELL, B.A., F.I.C. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 250 pp., with 28 illustrations. 6s. net.

HYPNOTISM AND SUGGESTION. In Daily Life, Education, and Medical Practice. By BERNARD HOLLANDER, M.D. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 6s. net.

ROODSCREENS AND ROODLOFTS. By F. BLIGH BOND, F.R.I.B.A., and the Rev. DOM BEDE CAMM, O.S.B. With over 88 full-page collotype reproductions, and upwards of 300 other beautiful illustrations. In demy 4to, two vols., handsome cloth gilt, gilt top. 32s. net.

MISCELLANEOUS (contd.)

MYSTICISM AND MAGIC IN TURKEY. An Account of the Religious Doctrines, Monastic Organisation, and Ecstatic Powers of the Dervish Orders. By LUCY M. J. GARNETT, Author of "Turkey of the Ottomans." In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top with illustrations. 6s. net.

THE PARACLETE AND MAHDI, or The Exact Testimony of Science to Revelation and Exposition of the Most Ancient Mysteries and Cults. An interpretation of primeval signs, symbols, signets, and coins. By JOHN LOCKE ESTENS, M.R.S., Sydney. With 80 illustrations and diagrams of geometrics of the sacred measures and Laws of Holy Writ. Size 10 in. by 6½ in. Cloth gilt, 540 pp. 31s. 6d. net.

THE NEW MAN: A Portrait Study of the latest type. By PHILIP GIBBS, Author of "The Street of Adventure," "The Eighth Year," etc. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 3s. 6d. net.

SYMBOLISM OF ANIMALS AND BIRDS Represented in English Church Architecture. By ARTHUR H. COLLINS, M.A. (Oxon). With 120 illustrations. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 5s. net.

THE HEROIC IN MISSIONS. Pioneers in six fields. By the Rev. A. R. BUCKLAND, M.A. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 1s. 6d.

EDUCATION AND SOCIAL LIFE. By the Rev. J. WILSON HARPER, D.D. In crown 8vo, cloth. 4s. 6d. net.

THE BEGINNINGS OF THE TEACHING OF MODERN SUBJECTS IN ENGLAND. By FOSTER WATSON, M.A., Professor of Education in the University College of Wales; Aberystwyth. In crown 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d. net.

STUDIES IN ELOCUTION. A guide to the theory and practice of the art of public speaking and reciting, with over 100 selections for Reciters and Readers. By E. M. CORBOULD (Mrs. Mark Robinson). In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, silk register. 2s. 6d. net.

PUBLIC SCHOOL LIFE. Each in foolscap 8vo, cloth, with 32 full page plate illustrations. 2s. net.

WESTMINSTER. By W. TEIGNMOUTH SHORE.

ETON. By AN OLD ETONIAN.

HARROW. By ARCHIBALD FOX

RUGBY. By H. H. HARDY.

THE ROYAL HIGH SCHOOL, EDINBURGH. By J. J. TROTTER With 32 illustrations. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 3s. 6d. net.

FRENCH PROSE WRITERS OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY AND AFTER. With Biographical and Critical Notices in French, and Literary and Bibliographical Notes in English. By VICTOR LEULIETTE, B-ès-L., A.K.C. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 350 pp. 3s. net.

MISCELLANEOUS (contd.)

THE REVERIES OF A BACHELOR : or, A Book of the Heart. By the late IK MARVEL. With an Introduction by ARLO BATES. In foolscap 8vo, gilt top, limp lambskin. 2s. 6d. net.

THE BOOK OF THE CHILD. An Attempt to Set Down what is in the Mind of Children. By FREDERICK DOUGLAS HOW. In foolscap 8vo, cloth. 2s. net.

ATHLETIC TRAINING FOR GIRLS. Compiled and Edited by C. E. THOMAS. Cheaper Edition. In crown 8vo, with 36 illustrations. 1s. 6d. net.

OVERHEARD AT THE ZOO. By GLADYS DAVIDSON. With 2 coloured plates and 26 black and white illustrations. In foolscap 4to, cloth. 2s. 6d. net.

LIGHTER MOMENTS. From the note-book of BISHOP WALSHAM HOW. Edited by his son, FREDERICK DOUGLAS HOW. In small crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 2s. 6d.

NATURAL HISTORY, ETC.

THE A B C OF POULTRY. By E. B. JOHNSTONE. In crown 8vo, cloth, Cheap Edition. 1s. 6d. net.

CATS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT. By Miss FRANCES SIMPSON. Third Edition. In crown 8vo, with 25 beautifully reproduced photographs of famous prize-winning cats. 2s. net.

REPTILES OF THE WORLD. Tortoises and Turtles, Crocodilians, Lizards, and Snakes of the Eastern and Western Hemispheres By Professor RAYMOND L. DITMARS. With frontispiece in colour, and nearly 200 illustrations from photographs taken by the Author. In royal 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 20s. net.

PEEPS INTO NATURE'S WAYS. By JOHN J. WARD. Being chapters on insect, plant and minute life. Illustrated from photographs and photo-micrographs taken by the Author. Cheaper Edition. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 3s. 6d. net.

INSECT LIFE : Its Why and Wherefore. By HUBERT G. STANLEY, F.E.S. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with 25 illustrations. 2s. 6d. net.

THE CHOW CHOW. By LADY DUNBAR OF MOCHRUM. With 24 illustrations. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 2s. 6d. net.

NATURAL HISTORY, ETC. (contd.)

TRAINING THE DOG. By R. S. LEMMON. A simple guide on how to bring up an all-round dog. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, illustrated. 2s. net.

THE POETRY OF PLANTS. By the late HUGH MACMILLAN, D.D., LL.D. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 3s. 6d. net.

POETRY, CRITICISM, & LITERARY HISTORY

THE POETRY OF ROBERT BROWNING. By STOPFORD A. BROOKE. Original issue. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt. 10s. 6d.
(See also Dainty Volume Library, page 5.)

TENNYSON: HIS ART AND RELATION TO MODERN LIFE. By the same Author. Original issue. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt. 7s. 6d.
(See also Dainty Volume Library, page 5.)

A STUDY OF CLOUGH, ARNOLD, ROSSETTI, AND MORRIS. With an Introduction on the Course of Poetry from 1822 to 1852. By the same Author. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt. 6s. net
(See also Dainty Volume Library, page 5.)

FAMOUS REVIEWS. Selected and Edited, with Introductory Notes, by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 7s. 6d. net.

EXPERIMENTS IN PLAY-WRITING. Six plays in Verse and Prose with an Introductory Essay. By JOHN LAWRENCE LAMBE. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt. 5s. net.

THE POEMS OF JAMES HOGG. The Ettrick Shepherd. Selected and edited, with an Introduction, by WILLIAM WALLACE, LL.D. With photogravure portrait frontispiece. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 5s.

MODERN FRENCH LITERATURE. By B. W. WELLS, Ph.D. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 520 pp. 6s. net.

MODERN ITALIAN LITERATURE. By LACY COLLISON-MORLEY, Author of "Giuseppe Baretti and his Friends." In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 360 pp. 6s. net

A SHORT HISTORY OF GREEK LITERATURE. From Homer to Julian. By WILMER CAVE WRIGHT, Ph.D., late of Girton College, Cambridge. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 544 pp. 6s. net.

SCIENCE

GREAT ASTRONOMERS. By Sir ROBERT BALL, D.Sc., LL.D., F.R.S.
With numerous full-page and other illustrations. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 3s. 6d. net.

IN STARRY REALMS. By the same Author. The Wonders of the Heavens. With numerous full-page and other illustrations. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 3s. 6d. net.

IN THE HIGH HEAVENS. By the same Author. A popular account of recent interesting astronomical events and phenomena, with numerous full-page and other illustrations. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 3s. 6d. net.

ASTRONOMY FOR EVERYBODY By Professor SIMON NEWCOMBE,
LL.D. With an Introduction by Sir ROBERT BALL. Illustrated.
A popular exposition of the wonders of the Heavens. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 3s. 6d. net.

BY LAND AND SKY. By the Rev. JOHN M. BACON, M.A., F.R.A.S.
The Record of a Balloonist. With four illustrations. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 3s. 6d. net.

ENGLISH MEDICAL WOMEN. Glimpses of Their Work in Peace and War. By A. H. BENNETT. With a Preface by STEPHEN PAGET, F.R.C.S. In crown 8vo, cloth, illustrated. 3s. 6d.

THEOLOGY

THE PRAYER BOOK DICTIONARY. An Indispensable Volume of Reference dealing with the origins, history, use, and teaching of the several authorised editions of the Book of Common Prayer within the Anglican Communion. Its scope embraces all accompanying ceremonies and supplementary rites, the ornaments of the Church and of all ministers, Church structures and fittings in their relation to worship, ecclesiastical persons and bodies, and the legislative judicial or administrative authorities now or heretofore empowered or exercising powers in regard to the above. Edited by GEORGE HARFORD, M.A., Vicar of Mossley Hill, Hon. Canon of Liverpool ; and MORLEY STEVENSON, M.A., Principal of Warrington Training College, Hon. Canon of Liverpool. Assisted by J. W. TYRER, M.A., Formerly Vicar of St. Luke the Evangelist, Walton. Preface by
THE LORD BISHOP OF LIVERPOOL.

Articles by nearly 150 Contributors, including : The Archbishop of Dublin ; Lord Hugh Cecil ; Dr. Hermitage Day ; The late Dr.
Dowden (Bishop of Edinburgh) ; Canon Driver ; The Bishop of Ripon ; The Provost of King's College, Cambridge ; The Bishop of Lichfield ; The Rev. T. A. Lacey ; The Bishop of Moray and Ross ; The Bishop of Aberdeen ; Bishop Montgomery ; The Bishop of Durham ; The Bishop of Exeter ; Canon Simpson ; Chancellor P. V. Smith ; Canon Staley ; Dr. Eugene Stock ; The Dean of Canterbury ; Canon Bullock Webster ; The Rev. James Baden Powell ; Professor H. B. Swete ; Dr. H. P. Allen ; Professor Du Bose ; Dr. Guy Warman ; Dr. St. Clair Tisdall ; Mr. Robert Bridges ; Mr. Francis Burgess ; Mr. Edwin H. Freshfield, F.S.A. ; Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland, M.A., F.S.A. ; Sir T. Sydney Lea, Bart. ; Sir Charles Nicholson, F.R.I.B.A. ; Mrs. Romanes ; Professor J. E. Vernham. The work is complete in One Volume, crown 4to, half leather gilt, gilt top, 850 pp. 25s. net. Write for 16 pp., Prospectus containing lists of Contributors and articles, specimen pages, etc.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH OF JESUS. A critical examination of the Gospel Narratives of the Nativity, and other New Testament and Early Christian evidence, and the alleged influence of heathen ideas. By G. H. Box, M.A., Lecturer in Rabbinical Hebrew, King's College, London; Hon. Canon of St. Albans. With a Foreword by THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 5s. net.

THE BOOK OF ISAIAH. Newly Translated with Introductions, Critical Notes and Explanations by G. H. Box, M.A. Together with a Prefatory Note by S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Late Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford, and Canon of Christ Church. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with two maps. 7s. 6d. net.

THE EZRA-APOCALYPSE. Being Chapters 3—14 of the Book commonly known as IV. Ezra (or II. Esdras). Translated from a critically revised text, with critical Introductions, Notes and Explanations ; with a General Introduction to the Apocalypse, and an Appendix containing the Latin text. By G. H. Box, M.A. Together with a Prefatory Note by W. SANDAY, D.D., LL.D., Litt.D., Lady Margaret Professor and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 488 pp. 10s. 6d. net.

THE RELIGION AND WORSHIP OF THE SYNAGOGUE. An Introduction to the Study of Judaism from the New Testament Period By W. O. E. OESTERLEY, D.D., and G. H. Box, M.A. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with eight illustrations. Second, Revised, and Cheaper Edition. 7s. 6d. net.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE MESSIANIC IDEA. A study in Comparative Religion. By the Rev. W. O. E. OESTERLEY, D.D. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 3s. 6d. net.

THE SAMSON-SAGA AND ITS PLACE IN COMPARATIVE RELIGION. By the Rev. A. SMYTHE PALMER, D.D. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with three illustrations. 5s. net.

THEOLOGY (contd.)

THE CRADLE OF CHRISTIANITY or, Some Account of the Times of Christ. By S. P. T. PRIDEAUX, B.D., Rector of Dogmersfield, and late Incumbent of Chelsea Old Church, and Dean of Whitelands College. With a Foreword by the REV. JOHN VAUGHAN, M.A., Canon of Winchester. In crown 8vo, cloth, 178 pp. 2s. net.

THE FUTURE LIFE AND MODERN DIFFICULTIES. By F. CLAUDE KEMPSON, M.B. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with diagrams. 3s. 6d. net.

THE OTHER SIDE OF DEATH. By RICHARD JONES, B.A. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 2s. net.

THE LITERARY STUDY OF THE BIBLE. An account of the leading forms of literature in the Sacred Writings. By Professor R. G. MOULTON, M.A., Ph.D. Cheaper Edition. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt. 6s. net.

THE ST. PAUL'S HANDBOOKS. Edited by E. HERMITAGE DAY, D.D., F.S.A. Each in crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 2s. 6d. net.

This new series makes a strong appeal to the large number of busy Churchpeople who desire to obtain clear guidance for themselves upon those questions of faith and practice which emerge from time to time into the field of controversy.

THE MINISTRY OF THE CHURCH. By E. HERMITAGE DAY, D.D., F.S.A.

THE ATHANASIAN CREED. By the Rev. CANON DOUGLAS MACLEANE, M.A.

THE PAPAL QUESTION. By the Rev. G. BAYFIELD ROBERTS, B.A.

THE CHURCH IN THE MODERN STATE. By FREDERICK ROGERS.

THE KINGDOM WITHIN. Being Teaching for our Day Recorded Exclusively by St. Luke. By AGNES STANLEY LEATHES. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 3s. 6d. net.

THOUGHTS ON SOME OF THE MIRACLES OF JESUS. As Marks of the Way of Life. By the Right Hon. and Most Rev. COSMO GORDON LANG, D.D., Lord Archbishop of York. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 6s.

THOUGHTS ON SOME OF THE PARABLES OF JESUS. By the same Author. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 6s.

THE GOSPEL OF JOY. By the Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 6s.

THE OLD TESTAMENT AND MODERN LIFE. By the same Author. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 6s.

THEOLOGY (contd.)

FAMOUS SERMONS BY ENGLISH PREACHERS. From the VENERABLE BEDE to H. P. LIDDON. Edited with Historical and Biographical Notes by Canon DOUGLAS MACLEAN, M.A. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt. 6s. net.

LAY SERMONS FROM "THE SPECTATOR." By M. C. E. With an Introduction by J. ST. LOE STRACHEY. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, silk register. 5s. net.

THE TENDERNESS OF CHRIST. By the late Bishop THOROLD. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 3s. 6d.

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST. By the same Author. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 3s. 6d.

ON LIFE'S THRESHOLD : Talks to Young People on Character and Conduct. By Pastor CHARLES WAGNER. Translated by EDNA ST. JOHN. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 3s. 6d.

THE SIMPLE LIFE. By the same Author. Translated from the French by MARIE LOUISE HENDEE. With biographical sketch by GRACE KING. New Edition. In foolscap 8vo, cloth gilt. 1s. net.

THE COMMANDMENTS OF JESUS. By the Rev. R. F. HORTON. Popular Edition. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 2s. 6d. net.

THE TEACHING OF JESUS. By the same Author. Popular edition. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 2s. 6d. net.

HELP FOR THE TEMPTED. By Professor AMOS R. WELLS. With an Introduction by the Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A. In foolscap 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 2s. 6d. ; also in paper covers, 1s. 6d.

THE INDWELLING CHRIST. By the late HENRY ALLON, D.D. In large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 3s. 6d.

CONSIDERATIONS FOR LENT. Readings for the Forty Days' Fast. By the Rev. VERNON STALEY, Hon. Canon of Inverness Cathedral. Author of "The Catholic Religion," etc., etc. In foolscap 8vo, cloth. 1s. 6d. net ; leather gilt, gilt top, 2s. 6d. net.

CONSIDERATIONS FOR ADVENT. Devotional Readings for the Season. By the same Author. Cloth. 1s. 6d. net ; leather, 2s. 6d. net.

A BOOK OF THE LOVE OF JESUS. By the late R. H. BENSON. In foolscap 8vo, leather gilt, gilt top. 3s. 6d. net ; cloth 2s. net.

THEOLOGY (contd.)

A BOOK OF THE LOVE OF MARY. By F. M. GROVES. Preface by HIS EMINENCE CARDINAL BOURNE. In foolscap 8vo, cloth, with frontispiece. 2s. net. Leather gilt, gilt top, photogravure frontispiece. 3s. net.

A LITTLE HISTORY OF THE LOVE OF THE HOLY EUCHARIST. By the same Author. In foolscap 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. net. Leather gilt, gilt top. 3s. 6d. net.

IN OUR LADY'S PRAISE. An Anthology of Verse. Compiled by E. HERMITAGE DAY, D.D., F.S.A. With Preface by the Right Hon. VISCOUNT HALIFAX. In foolscap 8vo, cloth, with photogravure. 2s. net; leather gilt, gilt top, with photogravure frontispiece, 3s. net.

IN ANSWER TO PRAYER. Testimonies of Personal Experiences. By BISHOP BOYD-CARPENTER, the late DEAN OF SALISBURY, Canon KNOX LITTLE, M.A., the late Rev. Dr. JOHN WATSON ("IAN MACLAREN"), Rev. Dr. R. F. HORTON, the late Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES, and others. Cheaper Edition. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. 2s.

THE SOCIAL RESULTS OF EARLY CHRISTIANITY. By C. SCHMIDT. Translated by Mrs. THORPE. With Preliminary Essay by R. W. DALE, LL.D. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 3s. 6d. net.

MODERNISM. A Record and Review. By the Ven. A. LESLIE LILLEY, M.A., Archdeacon of Ludlow. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt. 6s. net.

BODY AND SOUL. An Enquiry into the effects of Religion upon health with a description of Christian works of healing from the New Testament to the present day. By PERCY DEARMER, D.D. Ninth impression. Cheaper Edition. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 2s. 6d. net.

THE CHURCHMAN'S GUIDE. A Handbook for all persons, whether Clerical or Lay, who require a Book of Reference on questions of Church Law or Ecclesiology. Edited by ARTHUR REYNOLDS, M.A. In crown 8vo, cloth, 368 pp. 3s. 6d. net.

CHURCH ACCOUNTS. A Simple, Concise Method of Account Keeping, for use by the Clergy, Churchwardens, and other Officials. With Model Accounts. Compiled by the Rev. W. G. DOWSLEY, B.A. Size 15½ in. by 9½ in., half-leather, 106 pp., with interleaved blotting-paper. 6s. 6d. net.

COMPANION TO HYMNS, A. AND M. By the Rev. C. W. A. BROOKE, M.A. In crown 8vo, cloth, 200 pp. 3s. 6d. net.

For the convenience of the Clergy, Choirmasters, and persons interested in hymnology, this book is also bound up with the Hymnal itself, as follows : in cloth gilt, 6s. net, and in leather gilt, gilt top, on India paper, 9s. net.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY

THE NATIONS NOW AT WAR

are exhaustively dealt with in the notable

Countries and Peoples Series

The books present a clear and truthful picture of the people, both townsfolk and countryfolk in all classes, from King or President to the peasant, their tastes, their habits, their ideals. The country in each case is faithfully presented.

The Pall Mall Gazette says:—"The combination of good information with a natural and easy tone of narrative and a wealth of photographs gives them an informative and popular style."

Each in imperial 16mo, cloth gilt, gilt top, with about 30 full-page plate illustrations and map. 6s. net.

- GERMANY OF THE GERMANS. By ROBERT M. BERRY.
AUSTRIA OF THE AUSTRIANS AND HUNGARY OF THE HUNGARIANS. By L. KELLNER, PAULA ARNOLD and ARTHUR L. DELISLE.
TURKEY OF THE OTTOMANS. By LUCY M. J. GARNETT.
FRANCE OF THE FRENCH. By E. HARRISON BARKER.
BELGIUM OF THE BELGIANS. By DEMETRIUS C. BOULGER.
RUSSIA OF THE RUSSIANS. By H. WHITMORE WILLIAMS, Ph.D.
JAPAN OF THE JAPANESE. By Professor J. H. LONGFORD.
SERVIA OF THE SERVIANS. By CHEDO MIJATOVICH.
ITALY OF THE ITALIANS. By HELEN ZIMMERN
EGYPT OF THE EGYPTIANS. By W. LAWRENCE BALLS.
PORTUGAL OF THE PORTUGUESE. By AUBREY F. G. BELL.
-

- GREECE OF THE HELLENES. By LUCY M. J. GARNETT.
HOLLAND OF THE DUTCH. By DEMETRIUS C. BOULGER
SPAIN OF THE SPANISH. By Mrs. VILLIERS-WARDELL.
SWITZERLAND OF THE SWISS. By FRANK WEBB.
AMERICA OF THE AMERICANS. By HENRY C. SHELLEY
SCANDINAVIA OF THE SCANDINAVIANS. By H. GODDARD LEACH.

Other Volumes in preparation

The "All Red" Series

The volumes in this series are designed to give a full and accurate description of the British Empire as it is to-day, in a popular style and at a moderate price. A thorough account of each country is given by an author who is personally acquainted with its history, its life, and its present conditions. The books are handsomely bound, well illustrated, and contain maps specially and exclusively prepared for the series.

Each volume is in demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with 16 full-page plate illustrations, maps, etc. 7s. 6d. net.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA. By the Hon. BERNHARD RINGROSE WISE, formerly Attorney-General of New South Wales. Second Edition Revised.

THE DOMINION OF NEW ZEALAND. By the late Sir ARTHUR P. DOUGLAS, Bt., formerly Under-Secretary for Defence, New Zealand, and previously a Lieutenant, R.N.

THE DOMINION OF CANADA. By W. L. GRIFFITH, Secretary to the Office of the High Commissioner for Canada.

THE BRITISH WEST INDIES. Their History, Resources, and Progress. By ALGERNON E. ASPINALL, Secretary to the West India Committee.

THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA. With chapters on Rhodesia and the Native Territories of the High Commission. By W. BASIL WORSFOLD, sometime Editor of the "Johannesburg Star."

THE EMPIRE OF INDIA. By Sir J. BAMPFYLDE FULLER, K.C.S.I., formerly Lieutenant-Governor of Eastern Bengal.

South American Handbooks

A new well-arranged Series, intended to supply reliable information on the natural resources, climate, industrial development, and finance of the various countries of South America. Each volume in demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with illustrations and maps. 6s. net.

PERU. By E. C. VIVIAN.

SOUTH BRAZIL. By E. C. BULEY.

COLOMBIA. By V. LÉVINE. With Introduction by B. SANIN CANO

NORTH BRAZIL. By E. C. BULEY.

CHILE } Both by GEORGE J. MILLS. With an Introduction
ARGENTINA } by W. H. KOEBEL.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY (contd.)

WINTER LIFE IN SWITZERLAND. Its Sports and Health Cures. By Mrs. M. L. and WINIFRED M. A. BROOKE. New Edition. In crown 8vo, cloth, 290 pp., with coloured frontispiece and many full-page plates, maps, and other illustrations. 3s. 6d. net.

BRITISH COLUMBIA. By FORD FAIRFORD. With an Introduction by the Hon. J. H. TURNER, Agent-General for British Columbia in London. In crown 8vo, 150 pp., with 23 full-page illustrations and map. 2s. net.

INNS AND TAVERNS OF OLD LONDON. Setting forth the historical and literary associations of those ancient hostelries, together with an account of the most notable coffee-houses, clubs, and pleasure gardens of the British metropolis. By HENRY C. SHELLEY. In large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, with coloured frontispiece and 48 other illustrations. 7s. 6d. net.

WINCHESTER CATHEDRAL CLOSE. Its Historical and Literary Associations. By JOHN VAUGHAN, M.A., Canon Residentiary of Winchester. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with illustrations and plan of Cathedral Close. 5s. net.

CATALOGUES, ETC.

Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd., have pleasure in calling attention to the following Catalogues of Books published by them. They will be pleased to send on application any of these Catalogues, all of which have been brought up to date.

- [B] PITMAN'S COMMERCIAL SERIES. A list of Books suitable for use in Evening Schools and Classes and for Reference in Business Houses. 64 pp.
- [D] PITMAN'S EDUCATIONAL BOOKS (Primary). 56 pp.
- [G] PITMAN'S BUSINESS HANDBOOKS. 16 pp.
- [H] PITMAN'S SHORTHAND, TYPEWRITING AND STATIONERY CATALOGUE. 32 pp.

PERIODICALS

PITMAN'S JOURNAL ; PITMAN'S SHORTHAND WEEKLY ; EDUCATIONAL HANDWORK ; UNITED EMPIRE ; ETC., ETC.

Any who may happen to be in the neighbourhood of St. Paul's Cathedral are cordially invited to visit Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons' Show Room, at 14 Warwick Lane, where their publications may be examined at leisure.

BT317 .B6
Box, George Herbert, 1869-1933.
The virgin birth of Jesus.

106425

BT
317
B6

106425

Box, George Herbert
The virgin birth of Jesus.

DATE DUE MAY 15

BORROWER'S NAME

MY 5 '71 Charlene (Fischer)

Box virgin

THEOLOGY LIBRARY
SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY AT CLAREMONT
CLAREMONT, CALIFORNIA

PRINTED IN U.S.A.

